Strawberry Production Can Be Upped In Area; Production Improvement Made

By Paul Barwick
New and better techniques in strawberry production are again being put into the picture in Eastern North Carolina as a major spring money crop.

More and more emphasis is being placed on the crop. Extension specialists from N. C. State College are bringing to the strawberry producer the new found results of research in an effort to enhance the strawberry production.

Two meetings have been held, one at Wallace and the other at Mt. Olive, to give this information to strawberry producers.

Mel Kolbe, Extension Horticulture Specialist, points out that strawberry yields can definitely be increased where recommended practices are followed from setting of the plants to picking and marketing. Under proper conditions, the yield can actually be more than doubled over the present 200 to 300 24-pint crates per acre. It is pointed out that where 8000 pints of berries are produced for a return of $1,580 that the net return is an average of $434.66, taking into consideration all expenses. The net return represents a return to land, management and capital, Kolbe says.

Concerning strawberry diseases, J. C. Wells, Extension Plant Pathologist, says nematodes and gray mold fruit rot are probably the two which give the most trouble.

Nematodes, in strawberries, can be controlled through broadcast fumigation one month prior to setting out plants with D-D or Telone. Research has also determined there are ways of controlling mold fruit rot.

It is pointed out that if the plants have nematodes on them when set out that fumigation does no good. So, that means that plants set out must be produced on land fumigated and from plants that were originally certified, or parent certified plants.

Dr. H. E. Scott, Extension Entomologist, reports that controlling of insects such as Aphids, Red Spiders, Strawberry Leaf Beetles, Strawberry Weevils and White Grubs and Weevils, with chemicals without damage to the berries.

As foe weeds in strawberries, Bill Westmoreland, Extension Weed Specialist, says that experiments in North Carolina have been underway only two years and that N. C. State College has no recommendations for the weed control in strawberries at present. He does report, however, that research is developing some chemicals which are showing some promise.

Duplin Co. Now Has Tree Planter

Duplin County now has a tree planter.

Radio Station WLSE, in Wallace, financed the purchasing of the machine. It is now available for rental at the Duplin County Agricultural Building.

The machine has been turned over to the Duplin County Agricultural worker's Council for rental. The rental fees will be used to pay WLSE back the purchase price. Then it will become the property of the County.

Jim Bunce, President of the Workers' Council, said the machine can be rented in the Federal Crop Insurance Office, Mrs. Emma Lockamy, secretary-treasurer of the Workers' Council, is in charge of the rental.

It cost a minimum of $3.00 per day or $150 per 1,000 trees which are to be set out with the tree planter.

then pick up the five lost by penalty through the powerful Mt. Olive line . . . the line that nobody could run against. On the next play Scoot-Benton raced 12 yards down to the Mt. Olive 18. Quarterback Straughan faked a pitch out and passed to All Conference End Collin and alone for the touchdown. The attempt for the extra point was broken up by L. B. Brewer.

In the second quarter Mt. Olive marched 94 yards to tie the score with the aid of a 15 yard penalty against James Kenan at a very crucial moment of the game. With the return of the kick by Phil Faucette from 6 to the 13, Harold Barwick picked up 2, then the Panthers got five more by a penalty. Brewer got about 3 more, and again Brewer got one before Barwick made a first down. Then James Kenan drew a 15 yard penalty and the Panthers begin to roll and in eight plays they had moved the ball down to the Tigers 11 yard line. With first and 10 the Panthers tried three passes that were incomplete, with halfback Benton knocking the ball out of entered receivers hands twice. And with fourth and 10 and the ball on the 11 yard line Faucette hit Jimmy Beaves on the goal line for the score. The try
