When controversy leads to public enlightenment, we are all for it, but there are times when controversy results in public confusion, with disastrous results. This is particularly true when experts clash on technical points that cannot be grasped quickly by those of us without scientific background.

We fervently hope that recent controversy over the relative merits of polio vaccines will not discourage parents from seeing that their families are given a full series of Salk shots immediately. This is the critical time of year when the unprotected are most exposed to the polio attack. The Salk vaccine is available now. It is more than 90 per cent effective in preventing paralytic polio. Those who have not been vaccinated are gambling against the possibility of being crippled for life through their own negligence.

Whether or not the Sabin live-virus vaccine is a better vaccine than Dr. Salk's is a matter for scientists and physicians to decide - later. The National Foundation, which financed all the research leading to both vaccines with funds contributed to the March of Dimes, gives the only sound advice which parents can follow. It points out that, since no live-virus vaccine has yet been licensed for distribution, since you cannot get live-virus vaccine from your physician, and since the present polio "season" will be over before mass production, licensing and distribution of the live-virus vaccine are completed, there is only one course of action for conscientious parents to pursue. Get your family started on a full series of Salk shots TODAY.

Millions of pre-school children and young adults are still without protection. These are the age groups most open to attack.

Don't let technical controversy confuse you. Vaccinate NOW.

North Carolina Still Has Smallest Size U. S. Farms

Figures now in from the 1939 Census of Agriculture show that North Carolina farms are now increasing in size for the first time since the Civil War. The average Tar Heel farm in 1939 had 83.4 acres, or about 15 more acres than in 1934. During the five-year period from 1934-39, North Carolina farms averaged gaining only one acre.

While the trend is now the same, the increase in size of North Carolina farms is far below the average for the United States. In 1934, the average U. S. farm had 242 acres. By 1939, it had increased to 302 acres.

North Carolina farms are still the smallest in the Nation by a considerable margin.

Broilers Growers

desolate situation, some good always comes because it causes us to think and make changes to improve our industry.

In his remarks, King praised the Eastern North Carolina Broilers Growers, Inc., and the good it has already done. He pointed out that good it will do will not come overnight. It will take a lot of work and effort.

He asked the broiler producers there not to become "too impatient" and to work together for the total good of agriculture.

Barwick, who has just completed a study of broiler conditions in other sections of North Carolina, reported, on some of the weak points in the industry, from the producer standpoint, which the Board of Directors of the Broiler Growers, Inc. believe can be improved and thus strengthen the entire program.

Barwick said it is the "full intention of the Board of Directors to make a thorough study of every situation in order to help improve the total broiler industry, from the farm to the table."

One of the phases which was stressed is the need for improving the feed concession ration of feed to broiler weight produced in Eastern North Carolina. Barwick said there is a wide range of difference in feed conversion in Piedmont and Eastern North Carolina.

"It is obvious there is something wrong," he said. In speaking of feed conversion, Barwick added: "We have found something which could be the difference. We learned in the Piedmont that most of the trucks used to deliver the feed are swept out at the farm to make sure no feed is left inside the truck."

Barwick also suggested that a farmer gets a fairer weight for his labor and in feed conversion when broilers are weighed at the broiler house door on the farm rather than at the end of the route at the processing plant.

He added that more study needs to be made along these lines in order to determine just how much of a loss in weight the producer is having to take in hauling from the farm to the processing plant. Many instances have been reported to the Broiler Growers, Inc. of broilers not being weighed for several hours after leaving the farm, and the producer is having to take the loss in weight.

It was announced at the meeting that Dr. E. P. Roy, Associate Professor at Louisiana State University, Baton Rouge, La., has been engaged as a speaker by the Eastern North Carolina Broiler Growers, Inc. for August 17, in Wallace. The meeting will begin at 8 p. m. in the American Legion Hut.

Dr. Roy is an outstanding economist on broiler contracts in the United States.

I. J. Sandlin, chairman and who presided over the meeting, said, "We feel fortunate in securing the services of Dr. Roy for this August 17, meeting and hope that every broiler producer in Eastern North Carolina will make a special effort to hear him."

RURAL ELECTRIFICATION... private enterprise with a social conscience

In just 25 years, rural electrification has done more to revolutionize farming—while it brought city comforts to the country—than any other social or economic force.

Back of this progress has been the Rural Electrification Administration, created in 1935 to provide a source of long term low cost financing for people like us.

As a result, over 1,000 locally owned and operated rural electric systems—much like ours—have built over 1 1/2 million miles of line to serve over 16 million. They have borrowed about $3 1/2 billion from REA, and have repaid with interest over $1.1 billion into the U.S. Treasury.

Like us, they try their best to "serve 'em all—near or far—large or small." This, we believe is an outstanding example of private enterprise with a social conscience.
