Trial & Error

Sunday is Fathers Day! seems that Fathers do not get the recognition on their day that Mother's receive. Why? Is it because men enjoy acting as though they do not like attention, when deep down underneath they love it, or is it because we fail to recognize Father as we should? Each parent has a vital role in each family. A young daughter once prepared for her father a book of poems which she had written berself, to give to him on Father's Day. She closed the book with the note: "I hone you liked this book of poems. I not only thought you would, I knew: I hope it will make joi yery happy, because I made it just for you!" To me this expresses the closeness between Father at and Daughter, "I didn't only tack you would. I knew.'
