before it got light enough to read a newspaper.

With summer almost here, there's a big temperature advantage to early morning fishing, as well. I'd have to really be catching them to enjoy fishing in direct hot sun with 90 degree weather. When I was a teenager, two of my duties, among others, were to keep the wood box filled in winter and the grass cut in summer. It took a little ridicule from my Mama, to get me to realize it made more sense to mow in the cool of the morning, I did finally figure it out when she told me once that she hoped it was "hot as blue blazes" when I put off mowing till one of the hottest afternoons of the year. I pushed that old Craftsman mower and mopped sweat, vowing to learn from my lesson this time to get the mowing done in the morning.

One of the blessings of my life is the fact that my wife, Cherie, has developed a love of hunting, shooting, and fishing. One of the worst things about her new found appreciation of the traditional outdoor sports, though, is that she is by nature a late riser. It has taken me a few years to get her to understand that the time from first light to full day is more productive than any other time but I have managed it. OK, so I've convinced Cherie that there's a big advantage to rising early for a hunting, shooting, or fishing trip. Now if I can just figure out how to keep her from being grouchy before 8 a.m., I'll be in good shape. One morning as we drove through the pre-dawn darkness, I suggested that was going to be my next project. "Wouldn't it be easier to teach the fish to sleep later?" was the grumpy reply.
