Health Group Would Construct 400-Bed Hospital At UNC

The North Carolina Medical Care Commission has revealed its proposed allocation of 7200 additional hospital beds in the state.

The commission's five-year Good Health Plan (1947-51) for building new general hospitals, health (medical) centers and enlargement of existing hospital facilities in North Carolina, was bared in a map distributed to members of both houses of the General Assembly.

The plan, as outlined in the map, calls for the construction of nine new hospitals, including the 400-bed state teaching hospital at Chapel Hill, and 24 rural health centers.

Counties getting new hospitals under the proposed plan would be Orange (the 400-bed teaching hospital to be located adjacent to the University school of medicine), Madison, Yancey, Chatham, Franklin, Scotland, Bladen, Sampson and Pender.

Health centers would be built in Graham, Swain, Clay, Watauga, Alexander, Yadkin, Davie, Alleghany, Stokes, Montgomery, Caswell, Warren, Hoke, Northampton, Greene, Jones, Pamlico, Washington, Gates, Currituck, Perquimans, Bertie, Dare and Hyde counties.

The proposed allocation of beds lists 1500 beds to mental hospitals, 700 to tuberculosis hospitals, 400 to health (medical) centers, 400 to the University teaching hospital, and 4200 to be distributed on a basis of need to new hospitals and for enlargement of existing hospitals.

Also, it is noted, the state expects to acquire a large part of Camp Butner at Durham and use its 3,374 hospital beds for mental patients, thereby increasing new mental beds to 4,874 and the total new beds for all hospitals to 10,574.
