Junior Dairy Shows Were Successful

One of the most successful junior dairy cattle show years since they began in 1941 was recently closed by North Carolina junior dairy farmers, says J. A. Arey, in charge of dairying for the State college extension service. In the eight district shows which were staged, five of them by white 4-H and FFA members, and three by Negroes, 1,225 head of dairy cattle were exhibited, and $10,000 in prize money were offered by the sponsors. The shows were held to stimulate interest among young people in the development and care of good dairy cattle, Mr. Arey said. In his praise for this year's shows, Mr. Arey said, "more shows have been held, more money was paid out as premiums, and the average quality of the animals shown was better than ever before." A summary of this year's events, including city, number of animals, money provided, and sponsors follow: Asheville, 176, $2,000, Asheville Merchants association. Statesville, 342, $1,500, Belk stores. Lexington, 313, $2,500, Coble Dairy Products company. Durham, 145, $2,000, Belk-Leggett stores. Certified Grain Seeds Available

There is still a large supply of certified wheat and oat seed available in North Carolina despite the larger than usual acreage seeded to small grain this fall, says A. D. Stuart seed improvement specialist for the State college extension service. Scotland county, with 12 growers, leads the 31 counties producing certified oats, Mr. Stuart said, and Sampson and Beaufort follow as close seconds. Growers in the 31 counties produced approximately 75,000 bushels of pure seed oats last year. Harnett county, with 11 growers, led the list of those producing certified wheat seed, Sampson, Howe, Scotland, Robeson, and Gaston followed in order. Certified seed growers throughout the state have followed recommendations of the N. C. agricultural experiment station. They prepared good seed beds, planted

Lunch Rooms Get Tar Heel Sweet Potatoes

Raleigh—More than 9,000 bushels of North Carolina-grown sweet potatoes, purchased by the U. S. department of agriculture under its mandatory price-supporting program, are being distributed to school lunchrooms and welfare institutions within the state, Jay P. Davis, of the state department of agriculture, has reported. Davis said that the potatoes were being purchased in the Currituck-Camden area and that 19 and one-half carloads had been distributed to points within the state. He said the state department of agriculture has requested eight additional carloads, which probably will be shipped within the next few days. He said a large part of the sweet potatoes already distributed to lunchrooms and institutions will be sorted for use in the next few weeks, and urged lunchroom sponsors and institutional officials to plan the canning of part of their allocations for later use, wherever food preservation facilities are available, as the type of potato being purchased is not adapted to storage. Sweet potatoes, he pointed out, are rich in vitamin A, and provide good supplies of vitamin C, as well as small amounts of minerals and B vitamins.

Buy Guano Now, Farmers Warned

Raleigh—North Carolina farmers were advised by D. S. Coltrane, assistant state commissioner of agriculture, to place orders early for fertilizer in order to be assured of sufficient plant food for their crops next year. Coltrane emphasized the necessity for an early movement of fertilizer because of a potential shortage of boxcars, lack of storage space and prospective insufficient supplies of fertilizer on a national basis. "It seems that our farmers are rather complacent with regard to supplies for the coming year," he commented. Leaders of the fertilizer industry are anticipating no reduction in the volume of fertilizer used in North Carolina despite a prospective sharp cut in tobacco acreage next year. They see increased use of fertilizer for corn, cotton and pastures, and larger applications of fertilizer to the tobacco acreage put into cultivation. Few new fertilizer plants are serving the tobacco area, and consumption of fertilizer is nearly double what it was six or seven years ago. Coltrane said farmers would be making a mistake to postpone ordering fertilizer because of the impending reduction in tobacco acreage and low tobacco prices. To be safe, farmers should get their fertilizer before January, he declared.

Flue-cured tobacco markets in North Carolina opened Monday following a three-day shutdown because of the withdrawal of British buyers from the market.

The markets closed Tuesday, of last week in order to give the tobacco industry a chance to work out emergency measures to meet the withdrawal of British buyers. Under the plan which has been worked out, the Commodity Credit corporation has agreed to purchase approximately $25,000,000 in tobacco during the remainder of the season.

SALES LAST WEEK Prices continue to decline for Old Belt flue-cured tobacco during the sixth week which consisted of only two sales days but the quality showed some improvement for the first time since opening week. According to the United States, North Carolina and Virginia Departments of Agriculture most averages when compared with last week's quotations were down from $1 to $3 per hundred with some dropping as much as $4 to $7. Those hardest hit were orange and red leaf and fair green jugs. On the other hand, the majority of primings and a few other grades showed advances. Fair lemon primings were up $9, low lemon $7.50 and fair green $7 for the greatest gains. However, the volume in these grades was very small. The quality of offerings was better than last week's. There were more good and fine qualities and less common leaf and non-descript. Bulk was chiefly common to good leaf, low to fine smoking leaf and low to good cutters and lugs. Volume of sales was very heavy for the two days this week. The sales limit of 2,000 baskets per set of buyers was lifted Tuesday in order to enable all markets to clear their floors for the sales holiday. Gross sales amounted to 12,786,350 pound at an average of $38.65 per hundred. Although prices were lower the weekly average was 82c above last week's because of the improvement in the general quality.
