No, they're not hieroglyphics; they're part of the prescription your doctor gave you the other day.

To you, that abbreviated Latin legend meant nothing, but to your pharmacist it said, "Mix the ingredients of this prescription in the form of an emulsion, and label the bottle 'One teaspoonful three times a day after meals.'"

Your physician often uses Latin in writing prescriptions, and for two reasons. First, Latin is the universal language of medical science, and a prescription written in any part of the world, by a physician of any nationality, can be filled by any pharmacist. Second, Latin is a "dead" language, and, therefore, the exact meanings of words are not subject to variation from year to year as are words in the modern languages.

Many drugs that have similar names, have very different actions. Take, for example, mercurous chloride and mercuric chloride... one is a calomel, a laxative; the other is bichloride of mercury, a violent poison. Then there are phenobarbital and pentobarbital, sodium salicylate and sodium silicate, acetanilid and acetone, aconite and aconitine, and a multitude of other drug names equally confusing to you.

They are not confusing to your pharmacist, however. His familiarity with medical, chemical, and pharmaceutical terms is but a part of his skill as a pharmacist... a skill developed through years of college training and experience in compounding prescriptions and rendering other necessary public health services.—Reprinted from a copyrighted advertisement published by Parke, Davis & Company, Detroit 32, Michigan.

In Diseases Of Tobacco Big Increase

Hillsboro—County Agent Don S. Matheson has spent most of the past week identifying tobacco diseases which are taking a heavy toll in the county this year.

The most serious trouble has been caused by the black shank disease, which is very similar in appearance to wilt and spreads much more quickly. It is very important to identify the diseases right now when the plant is growing because control measures for the different diseases vary with the type disease. For instance, if a farmer has black shank present on the farm, he should use either Oxford No. 1 or some of the Vesta varieties. While if the disease is wilt, these varieties will not help any, but the Oxford 26 should be used. It is recommended that any farmer having a disease problem should get in touch with the county agent
