Extension Service

Releases Bulletin

A new bulletin, "Common Poultry Diseases in North Carolina," was released this week by the State College Extension Service. Copies of the 200-page publication, which lists the causes, symptoms, and treatment of the 15 most troublesome ailments of chickens and turkeys, are available on request to county farm agents or to the Agricultural Editor, State College Station, Raleigh. The publication is designated Extension Circular No. 344.

The bulletin was prepared by Dr. B. F. Cox, poultry pathologist, who says poultrymen often suffer losses because of poor management and then attribute the losses to disease. He hopes the circular will enable farmers to recognize a diseased condition when they see one.

Among the diseases described are blackhead, bumble comb, bronchitis, coccidiosis, fowl pox, typhoid, pullorum and leucosis. In each case Dr. Cox tells how the disease spreads, how to distinguish it from other disorders, and what treatment to use.
