Planetarium's Easter Show Requires Combined Skills Of Artists, Mechanics, Carpenters and Electricians

Chapel Hill—A great altar and "stained glass" window of great beauty of color and design provide the climax to "Easter, the Awakening," now being presented each evening at 8:30 and at Saturday and Sunday afternoon matinees in the Morehead Planetarium in Chapel Hill.

Most remarkable of all is the fact that the great window, more than 18 feet high and 16 feet wide, is not seen by the visitors until the closing moments of the new and spectacular show.

"I have never studied architecture or design," Director Roy K. Marshall says, "but I dared to design the window, which the mechanical staff of the Morehead Building executed in wood according to my drawings. I suggested the figures and some of the color scheme of the 'glass' portion of the window to James Pace, Chapel Hill student and artist, and he proceeded, with some assistance, to carry out our combined ideas. I believe that, together, we have made as beautiful a window as ever has graced a modern church or cathedral."

Great candles, ranging up to six feet high, grace the front of the base of the window, in two rows that extend across the entire width. Electric lamps, flame-shaped, serve the candles, while dogwood blossoms, great clusters of lilies and geraniums add a touch of color and texture to the picture.

"Much of the text of the readings used against the musical background for this presentation is suggestive of the motif of winter, followed by spring," Dr. Marshall explains. "The readings from Isaiah foretell Christ's coming and destiny, while those from John Masefield's magnificent poems 'Good Friday' and 'Easter' are among the most beautiful lines ever written for the occasion."

"One of the most difficult problems, in presenting such special shows," Dr. Marshall says, "is the one of selecting the music that will fit the mood or the story, and the actual words of the narration. For the events leading up to the Crucifixion, and to set the whole theme of the show, Elegie by Faure is the happiest selection that could be made."

"The moment of the Crucifixion itself is wonderfully sounded in a brief passage from Rachmaninoff's Isle of the Dead. And, for the Resurrection, nothing could be more suitable than Hunneker's Le Roi David, as performed by the organ, orchestra and choir of St. William's Church in Strasburg.

But there is a powerful sublime reiteration of the word 'Alleluiah' over and over again, building even higher and higher, until at last, as our great window bursts into full illumination, the music reaches its climax, to make a perfect blending of sight and sound."
Visitors to the Planetarium see in the Chamber only the narrator, but Dr. Marshall is insistent that, behind the scenes, there are many members of the staff whose work is seen, while they are not, and all who come to Chapel Hill to see the Easter story must remember that mechanics, carpenters, electricians and artists are vital to a successful planetarium presentation. The current showing is regarded as the best possible example.
