James G. Faucette, rounding out 52 years of ser vice at Eno Cotton Mills last Friday night, learned something of the affection and esteem in which he was held by fellow workers of the Spinning Room, second shift. In appropriate ceremonies in the center of the department, the veteran overseer was presented a leather platform rocker as a "gift of appreciation" from his associates. It was the last night of a career with the firm which began while the Spanish American War was in progress. The following day he began his retirement, but for the night it was an occasion of good will, of mutual expressions of esteem, and of letting by-gones be by-gones. Mr. Faucette, sitting in his new chair surrounded by his fellow workers, is shown here just after the ceremonies in which the presentation was made by Joe Hughes, night superintendent.
