The Land-Of Orange

"That thirty-six foot spillway isn't a bit too wide for my pond," said Wiley Perry, Orange Grove last week. "Water came through it about a foot deep in that three and a half inch rain we had about three weeks ago. It didn't wash, but I'm going to get it sodded as soon as I can so that washing can't get started."

John Hawkins and Bunn Pope, Cedar Grove, are following fescue with tobacco on one field this year. The fescue will provide additional organic matter to make up for that consumed in the more intensive use of the soil during irrigation.

A good terracing system and rows on the contour are additional ways they are holding water, soil, and fertilizer in place, not only for this year's crop but future crops.

C. A. Brown and C. C. Brown, are planning a complete soil and water conservation system for their farm south of Eland. Pasture will be seeded on some of the land on which soil surveys, furnished by the local Neuse River Soil Conservation District, show that permanent cover is needed. Capability Class II and III land, on which erosion is less a hazard, will be used for crops. A water disposal system of meadow waterways and terraces, along with a suitable crop rotation providing cover two years out of every three is to be established to provide the protection the land needs.

Removing a hedgerow will permit larger fields around the slope for more convenience on working the land.

Facts on Tarheel INDUSTRIALIZATION

While we continue to be top-heavy in the three industries of tobacco, furniture and textiles, which account for 79% of all manufacturing employment, there are definite trends toward diversification. 43% of our non-agricultural employment is engaged in manufacturing as compared with 33% for the U. S. as a whole. Busy people are happy people—all contributing their share in making North Carolina a better place in which to work, play and live.

Another contribution to more pleasant living for North Carolinians is the brewing industry's self-regulation program where brewers, wholesalers and retailers—in counties where malt beverages are permitted under State control—cooperate to maintain wholesome conditions for the legal sale of beer and ale.
