RAMESES, AILING SYMBOL of Carolina's fighting football spirit, is reported to be recuperating from his mishap of last weekend (just as the team itself is). Dr. L. L. Vine said he's convalescing all right from a Monday morning operation for an abdominal hernia that resulted from a farm yard accident sometime the previous week. The five-year-old Tar Heel mascot, eighth in a continuous line of rams over the last 40 years, is expected to be back on the Kenan Stadium sidelines in good shape for the Notre Dame game.

IT HASN'T BEEN REVEALED who she is, but some Carolina coed now has a sagging girdle that caused a first class fire alarm at the Chi Omega sorority house on E. Franklin St. during the Sunday School hour last Sunday. The fire department was called because of the untraceable smell of smoke in the house. Firemen searched throughout and finally found a metal girdle stay lodged in the mesh of an electric drier in the basement. It was short-circuiting the machine.
