Orange Peelings

ELOQUENT JIM WALLACE was spokesman Monday night for residents of the King's Mill Rd. neighborhood of Chapel Hill who don't want traffic from a new development funneled through their neighborhood. They won their point with the Board of Aldermen which deferred action on approval of a plat for the adjoining subdivision. Referring to the background on development of their neighborhood, Wallace quipped that if it were a mystery book it ought to be entitled "The Case of the Receding Arboretum,"—an allusion to plans for a natural garden in this area.

YOU'D NATURALLY EXPECT such a rumor to crop up about now. But we heard it sure enough this week. There's sentiment brewing up again now for calling a fourth election in the White Cross School Attendance Area on merger of this district into the Chapel Hill School System.

AN EXTRAORDINARY VENTURE into good public relations was the five-column newspaper ad placed by Durham contractor Nello Teer in the Durham newspapers yesterday. An open letter to Durham and Chapel Hill citizens, it showed a map of the proposed two-mile dual-laning project the Teer firm has just started on the Raleigh Rd. in Chapel Hill. Then it explained plans for the job in detail, and invited persons so desiring to telephone 'em in Durham for the answers to any other questions.

AN UNUSUAL INCIDENT OCCURRED Monday night connection with the picketing in front of Chapel Hill's Carolina Theater. Because of the heavy rain the two picketers, including the Rev. Charles M. Jones, moved up on the paved portion of the sidewalk under the theater marquee. Within moments local police answered a call to the scene. In response to the theater management's request the police ordered the pickets back to the outer edge of the sidewalk. The next day in a conference it was established the pickets had been within their rights. Each picketer is now carrying a copy of this regulatory ordinance in order to clarify any further legal questions if and when they come up.

DEVELOPMENTS ARE DEVELOPING fast on the local political front. Last minute flash late yesterday was that Chapel Hill's Andy Shearer is about ready to give in to heavy pressure urging him to run for the Town Board. Two Wallaces—Jimmy and Earle—are also being pushed for the Chapel Hill School Board, as is Carrboro's hustling PTA leader Mrs. Neal Kaylor.

EYE ON THE BALL—The calendar—which designates the arrival of spring at 3:32 p.m. next Monday—is behind time for the weather, and the temperament of youth. Off to a flying early start for the opening of the outdoor sports season is 10-year-old Billy Hackney of Carrboro, an avid Little Leaguer who's already practicing for a spot on the Yankees team again this summer.
