

Orange Pealings

MAY DAY BROUGHT JOHN Umstead out on the town for a while yesterday morning, looking and talking right chipper after almost a month in the hospital. He spent about an hour in his office, stopped and chatted with several friends on the street, and said he felt better than he had since he stepped down from the General Assembly last winter.

IN FAVORABLE RESPONSE to the Historical Society's appeal last week, almost no women wore spiked heels in tramping around the old homes on the Spring Pilgrimage last weekend. However, some few walked barefooted through the old Moorefields homes... One of the more interesting exhibits were the old-fashioned hearse and the man-shaped coffin at Walker's Funeral Home in Hillsboro.

UNC POLICE ARE SEEKING vandals who wrought at least $400 destruction to light posts and other equipment around campus buildings in the pre-dawn hours of last Saturday morning. Torn up were a four-by-four light post in front of the Kappa Sig house, a stop sign at the campus entrance, a light post at Carolina Inn, and the windshield of a UNC truck, a water cooler in Bingham Hall, and the windows of another car near Winston Dormitory.

PIEDMONT MINERALS COMPANY in Greensboro is giving heavy advertising in the ceramics trade press to its mine on Oconeechee Mountain near Hillsboro. Under a large aerial photo of the pyrophyllite and andalusite mine the company claims that its Hillsboro operation offers "what is probably the nation's foremost source of these exceptional products," estimated to exceed a 50-year supply at double the current production.

A TELEPHONE CALLER CONCERNED over the near-tragedy at the Bolin Creek trestle of the Southern Railroad near Carrboro suggests that the children who jumped might have been spared.
