

Woman picket pays $10 fine

A Chapel Hill woman has paid a fine of $10 and costs in an out-of-court settlement of a public drunkenness arrest made while she was picketing a beer parlor on Fri. night, April 10.

The fine was paid to the Clerk of the Chapel Hill Recorder's Court on April 15 for Mrs. Anne Ray Cotterill, charged by police with public drunkenness while picketing a W. Franklin St. establishment in behalf of equal service for Negro patrons. A policeman was on duty at the scene that evening as a precaution against any disorder during the picketing, which has been carried on in recent weeks on a regular schedule.

According to police reports the woman was marching in front of the place along with a male picket, and appeared to be intoxicated. In response to a telephone call from inside the establishment the police said they went to investigate.

They said the man told them they would cease picketing until the next team of pickets came to relieve them at about 10 o'clock. When it became obvious that the woman was intoxicated, they said, they took her to the police station for booking. She was released on $25 bond when a friend came for her. When questioned Mrs. Cotterill admitted that she had partaken of some cocktails earlier, the police said.

HONOR RAY RITCHIE

Ray Ritchie, the man who increased sales at the University of North Carolina Book Exchange by more than $1,300,000, was honored this month with a three page article in "The College Store Journal." For 22 years, Ritchie guided the Book Ex toward success but he retired in December for reasons of poor health.
