

Standing By The Farmer.

The House added substantially to the record of this Legislature for constructive legislation when it completed enactment of the cotton warehouse bill. This is a measure which will be of inestimable value to the cotton farmer.

Warehousing is the first essential of the successful holding of cotton. In two many cases the cotton speculator has been the only man who could successfully accomplish the warehousing of cotton. As a result he has been the man who has made the money by holding cotton for a better price.

The farmer has held his cotton to some extent, but has had no means of protecting it from damage from the weather. The South has lost literally billions because it has not adequately protected its cotton.

Cotton warehouses, therefore, will help the cotton farmer both by affording facilities for the protection of cotton from loss from deterioration and by making it necessary to put cotton on the market as soon as the farmer gets it to the gin regardless of the price.

This is the sort of legislation that makes a law-making body solid with the people. The best work the Democratic Congress and the Democratic administration have done has been work for the farmer and if the farmers of the West had been properly appreciative the result of the last election would have been different.

The North Carolina law-making body is following in this respect the fine record set by the national body. It is showing a disposition to stand by the farmer by enacting legislation that will tend to facilitate farming as a profitable industry.—News and Observer.

WHAT CONSTITUTES A MODERN GOOD MOTHER

Comfortable surroundings, clean bodies, advantages of education, travel, contact with people of culture may count for much or may count for nothing in real growth of the inner self. We all know this. Sometimes the advantageous circumstances bring forth the worst failures in character, but the one thing that never fails is loving sympathy and nurture of a child's effort to put forth that which is within him. Thank God! this every mother, rich or poor, has it in her power to give to her children!

Let us then sympathize with a child's tasks, enter into his trials, rejoice in his triumphs. But the greatest of all opportunities to get close to a child's real life is when he is in his creative mood. These are his greatest moments, and if the mother can join in his creative efforts she need have no fear of being shut out of his inner hours. With small children the creative impulse manifests itself most generally in play. The child in play is putting fourth his inner understanding of the world about him. The door of the inner sanctuary of his real self is partially open then as at no other time.

How many mothers do we see blindly missing these golden opportunities? They send their children to the nursery and turn them over to an ignorant nurse-maid, because the mother wants to embroider or perchance play bridge-whist, and she loses her best possible means to study her child and her supreme opportunity of becoming his comrade. How many homes have a work-room where the parents and children can work together? How many boys have to improve their own work-shop in the wood-shed or in some neighboring boy's barn?

Obedience is best taught by example. If all parents will keep a close watch upon themselves, will constantly strive toward an ideal, will set an everlasting sentinel over their own self-control, self-restraint, and temperament, the development of the child will follow along natural lines. Everything in the training of a child depends upon the manner and attitude of the parent toward it. The fretful, irritable, complaining and scolding mother will develop a whining, irritable, nervous, saucy child. The parents should be made to understand that they are responsible for what their children are. As you are, so your child be. If you want quiet, lovable children, be these things yourself. Control yourself and then you will find control of the child easy.

There is always some explanation of disobedience. It may be lack of harmony in the home. Where discord reigns between father and mother there can be no united harmonious development for the child. One parent will tell him to do one thing, and the other will countermand the order and tell him to do something else. The child very soon disrespects both parents.

and obeys neither. Who can blame him? His parents have no respect for him, why should he entertain any for them. They pull him one way and another until he being an individual like themselves, resents such treatment and resolves to go his own individual way. His own will and self control are receiving no encouragement. He is punished for doing things he thinks he has a right to do; since at other times he has done the same thing unadmonished. He is whipped at one time for an offense, and at another time allowed to go scot free, possibly laughed at. The threatened child develops a reckless disposition to keep on at a forbidden act just to see if the threat ever will be carried out. It seldom is, and he learns that he can carry an act of disobedience unpunished. Blind obedience should not be expected in earliest infancy. The child should be taught simply by habit and example. The mother should exact obedience to judgment, principles, conscience, rather than to her higher authority.

The mother who feels that her duty ends when she has provided food, clothing and a home, the mother whose view of life is limited by her own home, has not risen to the heights of womanhood. There is no knowledge too great, no education too broad, for the mother who would open to the children doors of opportunity through which they may advance to all that is true and good and useful.

Lead, give the mothers of the world—
More love to do their part—
That love which reaches not alone
The children made by birth their own
But every childish heart,
Make in their souls true motherhood
Which aims at universal good.
