

Invite the Scientists to Take the Lead in the Industrial Question

By CHRISTABEL PANEHURST, British Women Leader

Man does not live by bread alone. There is a question of how to gain enough bread and other material necessities?

This troubling problem can be solved by the scientist. Yes at this very time, when science is on the way to its greatest discoveries and can offer more help to humanity than ever before, industrial unrest and economic straits are more intense than they have ever been. If only politicians of every complexion would agree to a truce on the industrial question and invite the scientists to take the lead and point the way.

So one hopes that, while women voters will be able to discover the highest possibilities of politics, they will also, paradoxical as it may seem, recognize the limitations of politics, and not imagine, as some men appear to do, that everything can be settled by a public meeting, a general election or a cabinet council.

The menfolk are quarreling about the sharing out of the wealth now available. Women, however, know that it would be easy enough to do a fair sharing out of what is there, for they have always managed that in their homes.

The real difficulty, as they know by experience, is to have enough to go round. The national difficulty is precisely the same, for up to the present day the total wealth available for the community has never been sufficient, even if shared out on the most ideal system imaginable, to give to each individual a life worth living from the material point of view.

This means that poverty can never be done away with until more wealth is produced for consumption by the people. That is where science comes in, for it is science alone, teaching new ways of producing increased wealth, and producing it without excessive drudgery, that can rescue the community from poverty and the present crippling burden of material cares.

But for the fact the scientists have undertaken finer and purer instruments are needed, these cost money, and this form of science is ill-endowed. The stupidity, the tragedy of it! Millions of money are lost through strikes and lockouts and industrial dog fights over the much too bare bones of present-day wealth. And all the time the scientists, who are the really effective industrial and social reformers, find their work starved and hindered for want of the necessary funds.

One further and supreme task falls to women, whose influence, now that they are citizens, begins to count for more than it ever did in the past. It is this—to open their ears to spiritual truth, to recognize that material well-being, vastly important though it is, ought to be made a means to spiritual ends. Women's place is on the watch tower, looking with far-seeing eyes for that new evolution for which the soul of the world

It Is Impossible for Modern Society to Part Company With Its Past

By CALVIN COOLIDGE, Vice President

The most pressing requirement of the present hour is not how we are to solve our economic problems, but: Where are we to find the sustaining influences for the realities of life? How are we to justify the existing form of government in our republic? On what can we rely for a continuation of that service of sacrifice which has made modern civilization possible?

It is impossible for society to break off with its past. It is the product of all which has gone before. We could not cut ourselves off from all influences which existed prior to the Declaration of Independence and expect any success by undertaking to ignore all that happened before that date.

The principles and ideals on which we must depend not only for a continuance of modern culture, but, I believe, for a continuance of the development of science itself, come to us from the classics. All this is the reason that the sciences and the professions reach their highest development as the appellation of a classical education.

There has been a theory that all learning ought to be of once translated into scientific and commercial activities. Advancement, however, can not be insured without a culture.

Unless Americans shall continue to live in something more than the present, to be moved by something more than material gains, they will go down as other peoples have gone down before some nation possessed of a greater moral force. The will to endure is not the creation of a moment, it is the result of long training.

Cost to America of 1920 Crime Wave Is One Hundred Million Dollars

By W. E. JOYCE, President National Surety Co.

An item of $100,000,000, hitherto not taken into calculatory cost, is added to what the war did America. This huge sum is the estimated cost of the 1920 crime wave, which is traceable to the effect of the war on humanity. If the present rate is maintained, crime losses for 1921 will be equal to those of 1920, and will mean to the unpopulated wilderness the cost of America's crime.
