PERSISTENCY

If consistency is a jewel, persistency is its twin brother. Outside of the fundamentals of honesty and ability, there is nothing that spells success like persistency. The man who hangs on, while others drop off, is the one who reaches his destination and goal. How many times have we known this to happen, even in the smaller things of life! How often is the story of success written around the fellow who keeps hitting the pace, day after day and year after year. There is no field of endeavor in which persistency in thrift, economy and small savings. Men have persisted in the fields of politics, and have finally reached high positions of state. Youths have sacrificed at the altar of persistency in seeking education and have seen their ambitions realized. Others have persisted and broken the fetters that bound them to wrongful habits and have been thus permitted to enter into newness of life and fresh fields of usefulness. Persistency, Persistency, thou too, are a jewel.

LIVING MEMORIALS

Each recurring memorial day, to commemorate the fortitude and heroism of the men and women who made history for the south and for the entire civilized world, should be an object lesson to the younger generation. It should be a stimulant for life as well as a memory of death. The boys and girls, the young men and young women of the south, these valiant soldiers in the strife for better and finer citizenship, who knew not the privations, the suffering either of the body or of the spirit of those who have gone and of those few who remain, can, by their strength of character and nobility of action, assuage the sorrow and become living memorials to the everlasting glory of the southland.

Truly, the dead cannot hear our eulogy. It is to the living that we must address our appeal. The memory of the soldiers who fell in battle and of the mothers who fell in sorrow and want, now finds its finest expression in the youth of our land, in the south's great and growing institutions, her schools and universities, her great highways and arteries of travel, her splendid citizenship, her commerce and general advancement. In a spirit of reverence these institutions and the people who have made them possible now strew the flowers upon the tombs of the departed whom we now honor, and from whose sacrifices the inspiration for noble achievements has arisen.

MAKING A GOOD TOWN BETTER

The area from which the community receives its principal support and which it serves is often referred to as the trading area; and the distance which is expected to be reached by local business is called the trading radius. In the light of modern usage, "community" is the given area, either urban or rural, that determines the communal relationships, or in which local projects—commercial, political, or otherwise—are governed. The community is the unity of co-operative achievement.

Why is it so important for each city or town to endeavor to lengthen its trading radius and broaden its area of commerce? Because in that way communities grow; and, unlike many other forms of competition, the healthy growth of one city or town does not necessarily injure, and should not be detrimental to the development of the sister communities. This is the correct view. It is the right attitude—the American way of building America. It is an important problem and has far reaching effects on the business and the building of towns and metropolitan centers.

There are many factors that determine the enlargement of a trading or business area. Primarily, the services rendered by local business houses, both retail and wholesale, offer inducements to the surrounding populations, which automatically and inevitably creates a center of trade and business for the district. But business alone does not do it.

standing institutions or developments in the community have the greatest part to play in the growth of the territory which is served; whether those be colleges, banks, stores, factories, or the natural assets, resorts or developed natural resources. Thus it behooves each institution to serve well that it may be repaid in terms of patronage and added strength. "Deliver the goods," and let the world know you can.

HE DOES NOT SURRENDER

S. Hines Scarboro has lost all except the inborn tenacity to keep on. That is worth more than the farms and the money that slick tongued stock salesmen talked him out of in his old age. That is the basis and bottom of character and that is what the salesmen lacked. He is immeasurably a bigger man than any of their tribe, for if they were built of the same stuff they would repay four-fold rather than see him without home or friends.

They told plausible stories of money to be made. The world was upside down because of the war, and on top of this illness had overtaken the old man. He was not himself. He listened to their fairy tales of wealth and then came collapse of the dreams they had brought into being. It was in disaster that the character he had built up through long years of work and perseverance asserted itself. The doctors told him he must die. He refused to die.

It isn't a pleasant thing to contemplate old age with no means of livelihood. It is drab and dreary in the extreme, but it is a thousand times worse to face old age without having laid the foundation of character that asserts itself in times of disaster and refuses to say die. It is not S. Hines Scarboro that is most to be pitied, but the slick tongued scoundrel who talked him out of his savings.

It may be that his misfortune will be the means of accomplishing that which the law could not do. It may be that wild-cat companies will be stamped out of this state. There is plenty of law to do it with if there are men with the courage to do it.—N. & O. May 6.
