What Others Say About Judge J. Loyd Horton

The following editorial on the untimely death of Judge J. Loyd Horton was taken from the Raleigh Times of July 12:

"DEATH OF LOYD HORTON LIKE A GREAT BOOK UNFINISHED"

"There's an empty niche today in the hearts of Raleigh citizens and a vacancy in the membership of the Raleigh bar that will not soon be filled, for the death of J. Loyd Horton is one of those community and professional losses that can scarcely be otherwise described than as irreplaceable. The emptiness of the place he filled is all the more poignant because he had taken it so quickly and was called upon to leave it with heart-breaking suddenness.

"Raleigh is a hard place to win its affections, if deep, move slowly. But in the short while Loyd Horton had practiced law in the Capital, he had taken leading position at the bar and made himself a useful and component part of the community. There was every promise that he was at the threshold of a career which would not only bring honor to himself, but reflect it upon a people who had already accepted him as one of their own.

"Elected to the superior court bench at the age of 26, Judge Horton was the youngest man to hold so responsible a position in the state, but in the years during which he presided over the courts he had shown a maturity in learning and a judicial quality which fully justified the distinction. He resigned some months ago to re-enter private practice as a member of one of the leading firms of Raleigh. Death, which found him at the age of 33, struck him down in the full tide of an active practice marked by a high order of ability and energy.

"Raleigh knew Loyd Horton in private life as a man molded of human clay, with mankind's faults and mankind's virtues, who shot square with his foes and tipped fair with his friends.

"The local bar knew him as a lawyer who combined a thorough knowledge of legal procedure with a wit and resource always at the service of his clients and always dangerous to his opponents. His sudden illness came upon him within less than a month after he had a lion's share in a legal victory affecting the entire south—the reversion of the Tobacco Growers' Co-operative Association.

"In politics Judge Horton was equally successful. As a youth he won the favor of his native county of Pitt, and in Wake he threw himself into the contests of the people among whom he had come to live with the same power of force, charm and appeal that marked his every step. He was largely instrumental in bringing about the success of Leon Brassfield in the contest for the solicitorship of the Seventh district, and he aided him brilliantly against the effort of his defeated opponent to force a recount.

"Loyd Horton's life was like an unfinished book cut short as the author neared the climax. His career ended far short of its peak, leaving for his friends only the memory of his pleasing personality and the speculation upon his untapped potentialities.

"We like to think of Loyd Horton as not removed forever from the things of life, but rather as in some far-flung Valhalla, his feet propped sociably on some comfortable table, meeting the spirits of the great names of the law, swapping North Carolina jokes with the giants of the old bar, striking hands with Colonel Armistead Jones, his partner of a few months—and taking his men's part in the wile-talk and stout friendship that are the relaxation of the square fighters at the law when court's adjourned."

"The Wake County Bar Association met yesterday morning to make preparations to pay their respect to the young and brilliant attorney. "I have known Judge Horton since he was elected solicitor at the early age of 24 years," Governor McLean stated yesterday. "Elected Judge of the superior court at the age of 26, he held one of his first courts in my county. I was much impressed with his ability and fine judicial temperament, which were very remarkable for a man of his age. He soon developed into one of the best superior court judges upon the bench. He possessed many fine qualities of both mind and heart that made him conspicuous among the younger men of the state. He was true to every obligation and his loyalty to his friends was a cardinal virtue. In his untimely death, not only the bar of North Carolina, but the citizenry as a whole has sustained very great loss. Personally I feel a deep sorrow at his passing."

"All of us are very much grieved this morning over the death of Judge Horton," declared Judge Bond, in the Wake superior court. "He was an aggressive practitioner, recently moved to your county from Pitt, and the flashing over the wires of the news of his death caused men all over the state to feel sadness in their hearts. Cut down as he has been in the early stage of his career, his sun is set down while it is yet day. His death at such an early age teaches all of us the lesson that we must be ready for the summons whenever the Great Maker calls us."

The Wake County Bar Association met Monday morning and heard the formal announcement of Judge Horton's death from W. C. Douglass, chairman, who gave expression to the sympathy of the association for the bereaved. The association passed a resolution that memorial exercises for Judge Horton be held in September on a date to be fixed later.

Major Matt Allen, Captain R. W. Winston, Jr., Charles U. Harris and James H. Pou, Jr., were named as a committee to escort the body and funeral party from Raleigh to Farmville.

T. Lacy Williams and A. J. Templeton were named a committee to secure an appropriate floral design. J. W. Bunn, J. M. Broughton and L. S. Brassfield were asked to arrange for members of the Wake County Bar association attending the funeral to attend in a body.

Adjournment of the superior court was of respect for Judge Horton was asked by the association, and was granted by Judge Bond, presiding.

BAR ASSOCIATION HEAD DEPLORES HORTON DEATH

Wilmington, July 12.—John D. Bellamy, president of the North Carolina Bar association, former congressman and president of the New Hanover County Bar Association, when advised tonight of the death of former Judge Loyd Horton, expressed deep regret and said that the state of North Carolina had lost one of its brightest young jurists.

"Judge Horton, during the time he presided over the New Hanover Superior Court endeared himself to members of the local bar more than any judge who had presided over court here in years," said Mr. Bellamy. "His ability and judgment caused Judge Horton to be held in high respect by all members of the bar and court officers," declared Mr. Bellamy.

Throughout the city of Wilmington the news of the death of Judge Horton was received with much regret as he had made many friends during the six months' period he presided over New Hanover court.

JUDGE J. LOYD HORTON

Announcement of the death of former Judge J. Loyd Horton, in Raleigh, Sunday, brings grief to his hundreds of friends in this county and section, and sympathy to his loved ones who mourn their loss.

Stricken at the age when most men are at the beginning of achievement, Judge Horton had already lived a career of unbroken successes and had achieved for himself an enviable position. He was a licensed practitioner at 21 and served as county solicitor of this county. At the age of 24 he became solicitor of the Fifth judicial district and at 26 was elected judge of superior court in which position he continued until last year, when he resigned to take up private practice in Raleigh. He was a lawyer of ability and has taken part in many prominent cases in the state since returning to private practice. He was a democrat and was active in the affairs of his party both local and national. Thus in brief, is the record of this son of Pitt county who on yesterday died at the age of 33 years and at whose passing the county and state feel a great loss.—Greenville Reflector.

(From News & Observer Tuesday.)

Many tributes to one of the youngest superior court judges in the history of the state poured in from all parts of the state. Governor A. W. McLean issued a statement expressing his feeling of personal loss as well as the loss to the state. Judge W. H. Bond, presiding over the Wake superior court, from the bench announced the adjournment for Judge Horton and his family to be held at his residence.

The Wake County Bar Association met yesterday morning to make preparations to pay their respect to the young and brilliant attorney. "I have known Judge Horton since he was elected solicitor at the early age of 24 years," Governor McLean stated yesterday. "Elected Judge of the superior court at the age of 26, he held one of his first courts in my county. I was much impressed with his ability and fine judicial temperament, which were very remarkable for a man of his age. He soon developed into one of the best superior court judges upon the bench. He possessed many fine qualities of both mind and heart that made him conspicuous among the younger men of the state. He was true to every obligation and his loyalty to his friends was a cardinal virtue. In his untimely death, not only the bar of North Carolina, but the citizenry as a whole has sustained very great loss. Personally I feel a deep sorrow at his passing."

CARD OF THANKS

Due to the fact that it is impossible for me to see each of my friends in person, I take this method of expressing my sincere appreciation for the interest manifested in my behalf in the primary held July 3rd, as well as in the first primary on June 5th. Words are inadequate to express in a full measure my gratitude; never the less, I want each of you to know that I am sincerely thankful for the support given me, even though I failed to receive the nomination.

Again thanking you for your support, I am,

Yours very truly,

Wyatt C. Tucker
 Farmville, N. C.

To The People of The Fifth Judicial District GREETINGS:

As it will be impossible for me to thank everyone personally who supported me in the recent primary, I am forced to adopt this means to express to the public generally my very great appreciation of the splendid effort in behalf of my cause.

To my friends I am grateful for their support, and my ambition which they have inspired, shall be not to disappoint those who have reposed confidence in me.

For those who did not see fit to support me, or who honorably supported my opponent, I hold no unkind feeling. I take it that I am now the nominee of the entire party, and when elected, will be the Solicitor of all the people and it will be my policy to prosecute the docket conscientiously and impartially, in accordance with the prescribed oath of the office.

For those who are interested, the tabulated vote by counties is submitted, as follows:
