POUTRY IN STORAGE MEANS LOWER PRICES

Increased holdings of poultry and eggs in cold storage means that the poultry grower in North Carolina must be prepared to face the situation and to decrease his cost of production and develop only high producing flocks.

"However, this state should not suffer from lower prices to the same extent as some of the other states where a large percent of all poultry products are consumed by outside markets," says Roy S. Dearstyn, head of the poultry department at State College. "North Carolina does not rank so high at present as a shipper of eggs and poultry. It is believed that we are buying more poultry products than we are shipping. This means that the North Carolina poultryman should make a vigorous attempt to capture all of these home markets by home grown fowls."

To meet the present situation, the grower needs to give serious attention to a number of points. Mr. Dearstyn says overhead costs of operation must be reduced to a minimum and the poultryman must have a definite breeding program. This means that inferior birds should not be used as breeders and that early hatched pullets of recognized worth should be developed. Culling must be more searching than in the past and less replacement stock grown out of season. Rigid sanitation and quick elimination of diseased birds is another item recommended by the poultryman.

When buying chicks for replacement, be sure of their source. Develop local markets and study production costs.

Attention to these facts will help the poultryman meet the present situation. The man with a high producing flock, carefully culled and well fed is making money in spite of low prices, says Mr. Dearstyn.

COTTON BOLL WEEVILS IN DESTRUCTIVE NUMBERS

With a ten percent infestation common over the entire cotton growing section of North Carolina and with some fields showing from 40 to 60 percent infestation, the boll weevil problem appears to be serious this year.

"It is unusual to have such a heavy boll weevil infestation so early in the season," says C. H. Brannon, extension entomologist at state college. "In some fields, our inspection shows 40 per cent of the squares have been punctured. One field showed 60 per cent and a ten per cent infestation was found almost everywhere. However, there is no reason to be unduly alarmed if growers will begin dusting before it is too late. One must examine the squares on the cotton plant to determine how the weevil is infesting the cotton. Merely looking over the field will not tell the whole story."

Mr. Brannon urges growers to prepare at once to meet this emergency condition. Where infestation is as high as ten percent growers should begin dusting at once. At least three applications four days apart should be given. In no case should the dustings be more than five days apart. Then examine the new squares again and if the damage reaches the ten percent point once more, additional applications of the poison should be made. It may be necessary also to make later applications to protect the cotton bolls.

If the calcium arsenate dust is properly applied, it will control the weevil, says Mr. Brannon. Those who have done the work correctly in the past will verify this statement. Good results from dusting have been secured on various private farms and on the Upper Coastal Plain Experiment farm near Rocky Mount. However, one should not jump into boll weevil control methods half prepared. Do it right or leave it alone, advises Mr. Brannon.

When A CLEANSING MEDICINE Is Needed

"I HAVE taken Black-Draught all my life, whenever in need of a medicine for constipation," says Mrs. G. C. Burns, of Buna, Texas. "My mother and father used it in their homes for years, and I was raised to think of it as the first thing if I had a headache or was constipated."
 "At one time I had indigestion real bad. I was all out of sorts, my skin was yellow, and I had gas pains. After a course of Black-Draught, I got all right. I have given Black-Draught to my children, whenever they needed a medicine of the kind."
