Luxury in Picnic Luncheons

Modern Home Decoration Service

IT is one thing to plan a picnic lunch party, prepare the edibles and fare forth to hill, or dale, or lakeside, but it is quite another thing to have the luncheon come out from its basket... fresh and appetizing. The basket this year will probably be richer in variety than ever before because it is now possible to include an enticing salad, and sandwiches of crackers and cheese, along with the hot and cold drinks, fruits and refreshments. Cellophane now comes in attractive envelopes of a size suitable for sandwiches, cookies or biscuits, and in larger forms that can be slipped right over and around a whole dish of salad. Such envelopes save the necessity of tumbling, because of their transparency and, being moisture-proof protect the taste and the freshness of what is within. Even the apples and other fruits should be wrapped and the tempting egg salad and crisp lettuce leaves shown in the picture kept as nearly as possible as they were when they left the kitchen. This is one of the secrets of a successful outdoor picnic party where it is held.

Officers Make plans For State Farm Meet

Decision to change the old State Farmers' and Farm Women's Convention into a Farm and Home Week was made at a meeting of officials of the convention held at State College last week. Farm and Home Week will be observed July 31 to August 4 and the central theme for discussion will be new agricultural and rural life programs as a result of the present governmental activity. A number of national figures will be invited to address the general sessions of the meeting and special attention will be devoted to continuous demonstrations and exhibits. All farmers and farm women's organizations in North Carolina are invited to hold their annual gatherings at the College during the week and to take part in the various sessions. The annual short course for farm women will be held as usual under the direction of Miss Ruth Current, and the State Federation of Home Demonstration Clubs will meet on Thursday, August 2. Charles A. Sheffield, general secretary of Farm and Home Week, says that a number of prominent speakers from Washington will be invited. Among them will be Undersecretary of Agriculture Tugwell; H. R. Tolley, in charge of land planning for the AAA; Senator Bankhead of Alabama, author of the Bankhead Act, and, probably Miss Perkins, the Secretary of Labor. A. E. Morgan of the Tennessee Valley Authority, Miss Martha Berry of the Berry Schools, and Miss Maude Wallace, state home demonstration agent in Virginia, are among others to be invited. The college is arranging for tours to be conducted to nearby points of interest and for exhibits to be increased this year. A number of demonstrations will be given on the campus and in the laboratory rooms. W. Kerr Scott of Haw River will preside at the sessions for the men and Mrs. Gordon Reid of Union Mills, Rutherford County, at the sessions for the women.

Codling Moth Sprays Leave Arsenate Residue

There are good ways of controlling codling moths on apple trees without using sprays containing lead arsenate, says Dr. Z. P. Metcalf, entomologist of the N. C. experiment station. Lead arsenate kills moths, he said, but it leaves an undesirable residue on the apples. During the winter and spring, loose scales on the outer bark should be scraped off the trunk and larger branches. Loose scales should be caught in a canvass and burned. Trash of any kind under the tree should also be removed and burned. The packing shed should be made moth-tight, if possible, and all windows screened in order to keep from the orchard any moths emerging from fruit inside the shed. Containers should be kept in moth-tight places or dipped in scalding water sometime before spring.

No Waste Feed When Silo Used

Corn and other feed crops lose only a very small part of their food value when stored in silos as compared with a 25 to 30 per cent loss when the same crops are shocked and fed in a dry form. This heavy loss of dried crops is due largely to weather deterioration and waste at feeding time, says John A. Arey, extension dairyman at N. C. State College. He pointed out that silage is the nearest approach to good succulent June pasture that farmers in this State can grow for winter feeding. It is also an excellent supplement for pasturage in dry weather. Either corn or sorghum can be used for silage. Usually sorghum will produce a larger tonnage and more nutriment per acre, but corn is generally preferred by most dairymen. Sorghum is easily blown down and is harder to harvest in that condition. Parmuskey and Eureka are the two leading varieties of corn used in this State for silage. The prolific varieties are also used by many dairymen who desire a larger percentage of grain than is produced by the silage varieties. Japanese seeded ribbon cane is one of the best varieties of sorghum for silage. The best time to plant corn or sorghum for silage is between May 15 and June 15. Later plantings are more subject to drought. The advent of the trench silo has made it possible for owners of small herds to profitably provide their cows with succulent winter feed. Three or four tons should be preserved for each animal. On the average, corn will produce a ton of silage for each five bushels of grain.
