Paupers Strike Oil in Poorhouse Yard

John Hupp and J. W. Yerian, who trudged over the hill to the Washington county infirmary at Marietta, Ohio, three years ago, victims of the depression, struck oil in the poor house yard, and the well is yielding them three barrels a day. Hupp is sixty-nine, and Yerian sixty-one, both veterans of the derrick rigs, and they are happier over their strike than the money it will bring them. They have been all over the oil country from Oklahoma to Ohio and when the fantastic thought occurred to them that there was oil in the backyard, the Pauper Oil company was organized with funds loaned by Superintendent L. A. Hall.

History of the Hour Glass
The invention of the sandglass is ascribed by legend to Luitprand, a monk of Chartres, who at the end of the Eighth century revived the art of blowing glass. Charlemagne in 807 received from Persia a magnificent clepsydra. He then ordered to be made an immense sandglass with the horal divisions marked on the outside. Modern authorities, however, believe that the sandglass antedates these events. The device is shown in Greek sculptures before the Christian era. Its use probably followed close on that of the clepsydra, or may have even preceded it in dry countries, like Egypt and Babylonia.

Certified Public Accountants
The first formal recognition was given to accuracy in the laws of New York state in April, 1896. Since that time all of the states have officially recognized the public accountant by creating the title, certified public accountant (C. P. A.), such title to be granted or awarded to applicants who satisfy the requirements regarding character, education and professional skill of the state in which recognition is sought. While there is still a lack of uniformity among the several states in the matter of requirements, there is a constant tendency toward greater strictness as laws are modified and new legislation enacted.
