CAN'T BLIND CHILDREN

We sometimes overlook the fact that what the children learn in the school room is only a part of their education. Recently the board of education in a middle western industrial city appointed a committee to make a survey of the citizenship training that was being given in the city's schools. The committee presently reported that the courses were making a fine showing, except for the fact that the children were learning too much about their city outside of school hours.

In class the children were taught all about the principles of government, how it is supposed to operate, what the ideals of democracy are. Then in their homes and through other contacts they were finding out that things don't always work that way. They were discovering that the practices in democratic government don't always jibe with the theories. The result was that they were concluding that their school room training was all very pretty, but that it didn't mean much.

A child who hears his parents boasting about some evasion of the law, who sees teachers going unpaid while political gangs are loading up the public payrolls preparatory to election day, who sees criminals escaping justice, is receiving a liberal education in government that can't be found in the school books. No wonder if he begins to think that ideals don't mean much in government.

The antidote, of course, is a different attitude on the part of his parents and citizens generally. We can put all the fine theories we like into the school books, but they won't have much effect unless we ourselves show a disposition to follow them. We can't achieve perfection over night, but if by our example we inspire our children with a sincere feeling that political virtue is worth while we will be doing much toward obtaining it. If we demonstrate disregard for it we cannot complain if they follow our teaching rather than that of the school books. — Daily News, Saginaw, Mich.
