AS WOMAN TO WOMAN

To be among the newspaper women in one of Mrs. Roosevelt's press conferences! The thought intrigued me and remained in my mind as a remote possibility but a pleasant matter for contemplation since I read months before that the First Lady of the Land deemed it mutually helpful to hold these informal conferences for the discussion of subjects relating primarily to women.

And so, when the opportunity presented itself, (due to arrangements made by my cousins, Mrs. Frank Capps and Mrs. Madeline Rountree, of Washington, D. C.), I was eager to attend.

Mrs. Arthur Bernard, a brilliant writer, who corresponds for several publications, invited me to accompany her, and as we drove into the White House grounds and parked I felt the first thrill of an aspiration realized, and reviewed the rather weighty and significant questions which I had spent much time in listing as ones of timely and world wide interest.

We were promptly and properly identified, and ushered into the Green Room until the hour of the conference arrived when we were shown to the Monroe Room to await the coming of Mrs. Roosevelt.

I had time to observe this room and its furnishings, the most interesting being the marble mantel on which was engraved the following bit of historical information, "This room was first used for meetings of the Cabinet during the administration of President Johnson. It continued to be so used until the year MCMIL. Here the treaty of peace with Spain was signed."

A large portrait of James Monroe hung on the right side of the mantel, that of his wife on the left, and directly above was the portrait of Mrs. Roosevelt's great grandfather.

The rug and rose window draperies were handsome, as was to be expected, but the only other object of great beauty to me was the crystal chandelier with its heavy bunches of exquisite cut glass.

Mrs. Roosevelt entered with buoyant step, and dignified bearing, and I wish to say right here that her cordiality and graciousness of manner was genuine and could not possibly be mistaken for the love of publicity to which her enemies attribute these and similar conferences. We introduced ourselves as she shook hands with us and spoke words of greetings, calling several of the newspaper women by their first names.

She was attired in a rather sober sport suit of black and white, the black predominating but relieved by twin folds of American Beauty crepe at the throat and a belt of the same shade. I thought, as on a previous occasion when I saw her, that she was much better looking than any of her numerous pictures found in current publications.

Mrs. Roosevelt was attended by her secretary and Irish setters, Jack and Jill, the secretary taking a seat beside her on the divan and the dogs lying at her feet and displaying their adoration as she would fondle first one and the other, pulling their ears in unconscious movement as she talked.

She first announced the schedule of entertainment of the early summer social season at the White House. And though these included a picnic luncheon for "The Ladies of the Senate," a garden party for the women in executive position in the United States Government service, (Mrs. Frank Capps attended the last named that same afternoon); a garden party for members of the Federation of Arts, which was holding its convention there in Washington at the time; a garden party for veterans in service hospitals in and about Washington; the receiving of members of Women's Democratic Club of Massachusetts and a group of women from Ohio, accompanied by Senator Buckley, and the receiving of the newly appointed Minister of Bulgaria, Dimitri Naoumoff, it was the outing she had planned for the 31 girls of the National Training School for Girls in Washington that became the topic of discussion for the entire conference. (The time I spent in research and preparation of intelligent questions for the occasion was a waste of time, for these girls had won the hearts of the First Lady and the treatment of their living conditions was paramount in her thoughts that morning.)

No one could doubt from the heart-felt interest manifested by Mrs. Roosevelt in these girls but that she would desire them as completely as possible. Mrs. Roosevelt, as we would the most distinguished citizens of the Nation, and from the accounts published in all the newspapers Sunday she did.

The reason for inviting the girls for an afternoon of enjoyment on the White House grounds was, in her own words, "because as other young people enjoy an occasional good time, I think these youngsters should too, and that is why I suggested they come to me for a party."

Asked when she decided to invite the girls for this outing, she replied, "As soon as I saw the prison like walls, which surrounded the buildings and the windows built up so high one would have to stand in a chair to get a glimpse of the outdoors, then I thought of the White House grounds and what a treat it would be to those girls to visit them."

Mrs. Roosevelt visited the institution upon the invitation of Dr. Carrie Weaver Smith, of Texas, the new superintendent of the Home, who asked her to see "an institution that is everything an institution should not be."

One was impressed with this "wonder woman's" depth of feeling as she described the gloomy, insanitary and appalling conditions prevailing in the school, which have, it is said, caused Judge Fay Bentley to refuse to commit any girl there in over a year, and the antiquated equipment, which is used in training them to take up life again beyond these prison walls.

Not for a moment did she leave a doubt in the minds of those present as to her profound interest, and its extent, which she declared had no element of sentimentality, "I think," she said, "it is a terrible thing to let yourself get sentimental about criminals, there are some who should be shut away from society with as little publicity as possible. I am not at all interested in a person set in criminal ways."

"What I am interested in is the great mass of people who have to come back into society and should come back better equipped to meet the world. They have been defeated once and they may be defeated again."

Later she referred to the taxpayers in this connection, "These girls are in there to be rehabilitated and as far as possible returned into communities prepared to meet the difficulties of life again."

"Therefore, it seems to me that complete segregation in gloomy surroundings is hardly the way to achieve this objective. This sort of thing isn't going to make it cheaper for taxpayers in the long run, it will cost them much more in the end for the people who come out of such institutions will be back on their hands eventually in insane asylums or prisons."

The women of the press were invited to the garden parties, and I longed to return that afternoon but an engagement with an acclimatist prevented me from having this pleasure and I repeated to myself for the millionth time, "How unfortunate are those who have to wear specs," which proves again that we mortals are never satisfied, as soon as one wish is gratified we straightway begin wishing again.

Keep a Good Laxative always in your home

Among the necessities of home is a good, reliable laxative. Don't be without one! Do your best to prevent constipation. Don't neglect it when you feel any of its disagreeable symptoms coming on. "We have used Theodor's Black-Draught for 21 years and have found it a very useful medicine that every family ought to have in their home," writes Mrs. Perry Hicks, of Belton, Texas. "I take Black-Draught for biliousness, constipation and other ills where a good laxative or purgative is needed. I have always found Black-Draught gives good results."
