

The Circus Is Coming

The Dan Rice Circus, the largest and finest circus now enroute has been known for many as the "Pride of the South". Artists both American and European, as well as Wild and Domestic animals make up the shows two hours performance.

Danny McPride, James Thomas and an army of famously funny clowns make up the laugh portion of The Dan Rice Circus that comes to Farmville for an afternoon and night performance on Thursday, September 9th.

When they make their first entry, the laughter begins with a travesty on the late Jim Braddock, Joe Louis championship fight and continue through their burlesque baseball game. Advance reports state that the clowns will cause you to shake with laughter, and fairly gasp with glee over these soul sunbeams, the cargoes of comicalities, the truck loads of tricks and ticklers, the host of hilarious hitters, the concourse of fashion aping fools, the mimics of men and manners, and the follies and fun of the day.

The management of the Dan Rice Circus has continued making clown alley one of the most important features of the entertainment that comprises over 60 well known and sensational features.

McPride and Thomas, producing clowns were with many European circuses and bring a new style of entertainment that is wholesome and clean. Now in its 85th year, the Dan Rice Circus has always made a big feature of its clown department because of the fact that old Dan Rice was recognized as the foremost clown of all times. Old timers will remember his last visit here when he will acknowledge the most popular man in America because of his ability to entertain. So popular did he become that at one time he was considered a possibility as a candidate for the presidency of the United States.

ACCIDENT RESTORES HEARING.

Sudbury, Ont.—Geo W. Smith, of Nairn Center, is one man who is glad he was hit by an automobile. Deaf for a number of years, Smith was delighted to discover, upon being picked up after the accident, that his hearing had returned.

Less Monthly Discomfort.

Many women, who formerly suffered from a weak, rundown condition as a result of poor assimilation of food, say they benefited by taking CARDUI, a special medicine for women. They found it helped to increase the appetite and improve digestion, thereby bringing them more strength from their food.

Naturally there is less discomfort at monthly periods when the system has been strengthened and the various functions restored and regulated. Cardui, praised by thousands of women, is well water tested. Of course, if not benefited, consult a physician.

Looking at Washington

governmental machinery that allows a minority anywhere to block the will of the voters as a whole must be overhauled in the interests of real democracy, as the President sees it. This is the idea back of the court proposals. It is the basis of the fear on the part of the reactionaries that the President plans reprisals. It will explain the tactics of Mr. Roosevelt's Democratic opponents who fill the air with lamentations about the old order's lapses and insist that the President is wrecking the party and the nation by insisting upon his program.

Not only was the President defeated on the bill to recognize the Supreme Court in a spectacular Senate battle but the effort to "further help those who toil in factory and on farm" through a wages and hours bill was also blocked. Competent observers believe that both of these measures would have passed if a vote could have been forced but effective minorities were able to take advantage of parliamentary situations and keep the measures from a showdown.

The Chief Executive was also balked in his effort to reorganize the executive departments and opposition seems strong enough to prevent the passage of the measure as proposed although it is possible that it will go through the next session in a modified form. Regional authorities, proposed by the President to safeguard national resources, got nowhere although the illness of Senator Norris was in part responsible for this failure.

Mr. Roosevelt was also effectively blocked in his demand for an adequate farm measure, including some form of crop control. For most of the session the question was sleeping but when farm prices began to drop the agricultural representatives in House and Senate got worried. Cotton wobbled and from cotton states came a renewed demand for legislation, which was tacitly supported by other agricultural groups, which feared that some new verisimilitude might plague other farm products. Finally, both houses obligated themselves to take up farm legislation as the first work of the next session of Congress, present indications are that a special session of Congress in the fall depends entirely upon how farm products hold up in the markets. If prices drop, a special session is almost certain.

These are the major defeats of the President's "program." It should be noted that on crop insurance, also, the two Houses could not get together, the on sugar both Senate and House flouted the views of the President and his cabinet officials, that neutrality legislation did not include the discretion that the President wanted and that on several other matters, such as the CCC, Congress followed its own ideas.

In fact, the eight-month session presents the curious spectacle of a Congress asserting its legislative power and the passing practically nothing of importance. It leaves the nation to determine whether it will give future support to the President or to his opposition. Naturally, Republican leaders are tickled over the situation, which they predict will mean heavy gains for their party. Certainly, it will not hurt them, although the main peril facing Republicans today is the possibility that the President will defeat his Democratic opposition and build a party, based on support of laboring and farming people and pledged to operate a government in their interests.

One diversion was the denunciation of Democratic leadership by several labor leaders, including John L. Lewis, who accused the leaders of being unable to carry out party pledges, and William Green, who accused the House rules committee of "stifling and defeating" legislation just as it did under the domination of "Cannon and his reactionary associates." Another was the prediction of Senator Gurney that "oblivion" awaits those who fought the President's court proposals and the bitter reply in the Senate from Mrs. Burke Wheeler and O'Mahoney. Nor with his Senate foes pleased with the address of the President at Roanoke Island, which they considered as "indirect" that the Chief Executive plans to insist upon "progressive" ideas and the elimination of interference by the "conservative" bloc of Democrats.

Much comment is heard about Southern opposition to the President's program and the statement is made that Garner, Smith, Byrd, Glass and other leaders from the South have little or nothing in common with the administration. This may be true in regards to certain leaders but the voting in Democratic primaries last year did not indicate any such condition and, in fact certain Senators, up for reelection last year in Southern States, made no secret of their abundant loyalty to the President. Unless such signs are reversed there will be no absence of popular support for the President in the South, where he is extremely popular and looked upon as the leader of the party.

As an insight into the life of this highly esteemed woman, the Rev. Mr. Ennis, in his talk, read this poem, which she had some months ago had reprinted and distributed to nearly two hundred friends and acquaintances:

PEACE
(182-3-4)
There's a hope that can never be conquered by fear,
A Peace that the world cannot give,
A Peace that is steadfast and cannot be moved
When near to the Saviour we live.

Our love may be tested, our faith may be tried,
Temptations like billows may roll,
But firmly we rest on Eternity's rock,
When Jesus abides in the soul.

We may pass through the waters and yet He is here,
To lead and comfort His own,
While closely around us, beholding our faith,
The arms of His mercy are thrown.

He may take in His wisdom our treasures away,
But only again to restore
The links that are broken, to sparkle anew,
Where parting and tears are no more.

If we cling to His promise and walk in the light,
That never, no never, grows dim,
Our many cares, whatever they be,
Will draw us still nearer to Him.
