Directory Of Our Tobacco Colony.

It is with pleasure that The Farmville Enterprise welcomes the tobaccoists here again this season, and with the citizens of the community invites them to enter into all the activities of the town and become for these months a real part of its social and civic life.

For the convenience of the "colony" we are printing a directory of every name of those engaged in the tobacco business we have been able to secure. There are several missing, of course, and we will be very grateful if they or their friends will advise us that we may add them to the list next week.

We believe this directory will be of service if clipped and carried with you, when wishing to locate some of your friends or acquaintances.

Pine Beetles Ravage Many Valuable Trees

Southern pine beetles have been ravaging many valuable pine trees over North Carolina this summer, according to Rufus H. Page, Jr., assistant extension forester at State College.

Beetles are most often found where pine debris was left on the ground to give them a breeding place, he stated.

To breed in sufficient numbers to successfully attack and enter healthy trees, the beetles must first enter diseased or damaged trees or freshly cut pine stumps or pine debris.

Delaying pine cutting until the middle of September will check beetle attacks, Page continued. But if pines are being cut before that time, a number of precautions can be exercised to protect the living trees.

Remove all the trunk and limbs of felled pines that are more than two inches in diameter. Lop smaller limbs and brush and scatter well so they will be exposed to wind and sunshine.

Peel all high, freshly cut pine stumps to ground level and burn or otherwise remove bark from the stand.

Clear away pines that display a yellowish-green foliage and around whose base is found reddish sawdust-like material. "S-shaped" galleries in the inner bark are a sure sign of pine beetles.

Remove from the stand all trees that are badly diseased, damaged, or otherwise weakened. Many infestations start from a single weakened tree.

Cooperation among land-owners is necessary, as little good can be accomplished by cleaning one area if timber in adjacent areas serves as a source of infestation, Page warned.

Requests for vaccinating poultry in Richmond county have become so numerous that the county agent is having to hold demonstrations in each community to show farmers how the birds are immunized against the disease.

Keep Inferior Lint Out Of Good Cotton

Picking lint from diseased or faulty bolls does more harm than good, warns J. H. Moore, cotton technologist with the central experiment station at State College.

Such bolls should be left in the field, he added.

Lint from inferior bolls will add but little to the yield, while on the other hand it tends to lower the quality of the cotton as a whole, Moore pointed out.

Moreover, it is hard to get good, pure seed from cotton in which lint from bad bolls has been mixed with that from good bolls.

Seed for planting should be obtained either from a reliable producer or dealer or from only the best field on the farm, he continued.

When seed is to be saved for planting, the elevators and gin stands should be cleaned thoroughly and the seed should be caught on the clean gin floor.

This will keep the seed from being mixed with other varieties or with inferior seed from other ginnings, Moore explained.

Planting seed should be stored loosely in a dry, well ventilated place. Cotton should not be picked when wet or green, he went on, but if it is picked while damp from rain or dew, it should be dried before it is run through the gin.

After heavy or prolonged rains, bolls should be allowed to bleach a day or two before harvesting.

Cotton from the first, second, and third pickings often shows differences in grades, staple length, and quality, and each picking should be baled separately.

Mixed Apples Impart Tang To Sweet Cider

The spicy, aromatic flavor and tang of sweet cider depends upon the varieties of apples from which the juice is pressed.

H. R. Niswonger, extension horticulturist at State College, has recommended the following combination for making appetizing, zesty cider:

Sixty per cent sweet apples and a sub-acid variety like Rome Beauty; 15 per cent acid varieties like red winesap, Stayman, York Imperial; 10 per cent of Delicious, Gold Delicious, or Bonum, which impart aromatic flavor; 5 per cent crab apple or seedling varieties to give tang; and 10 per cent Ben Davis, Black Ben, Wolf River, Limbertwig.

Although cut apples can be used for making cider, Niswonger pointed out, they should be free from worms and rot and ripened on the trees.

Early windfalls not yet ripe and over-ripe apples should not be mixed with those ripened on the trees. Do not leave apples piled on the ground for any appreciable length of time. All fruit should be washed thoroughly. The press and press cloths should be washed clean after each day's run. Place the cloths in boiling water for a short time.

After standing a few hours, the pomace may be pressed again. The second run of juice has a deeper color than the first, and may be added to the other cider to give it the rich color preferred by consumers.

Clear cider may be obtained by placing the juice in containers and allowing the sediment to settle, then siphoning off the clear juice.

At a temperature of 50 degrees Fahrenheit or less, cider will keep sweet for 24 to 36 hours.
