ROOSEVELT'S SUGGESTION FOR A NEW FARM ACT. JONES AND WALLACE COST OF PROGRAM.

(Hugo S. Sims, Washington Correspondent.)

In identical letters, sent to Senator E. D. Smith and Rep. Marvin Jones, heads of the Senate and House committees on agriculture, President Roosevelt recently outlined the chief points of proposed farm legislation. He urges a new act to:

- (1)—Safeguard farmers' incomes as well as soil fertility.
- (2)—Provide for storage of reserve food supplies against future scarcity.
- (3)—Control of surpluses, when necessary, with preservation of foreign markets.
- (4)—Protect farmers and consumers against extreme ups and downs in prices.
- (5)—Local administration of details.
- (6)—Reinforce any price stabilization features by effective provision against unmanageable surpluses.
- (7)—Continue present conservation program.
- (8)—Provide additional funds that may be necessary beyond present planned expenditures.

The communication definitely ended speculation as to where the President stands in regards to farm legislation, placed him definitely behind Secretary Wallace's "ever-normal" granary plan and delivered a smashing blow to farm and business interests opposed to crop control and in favor of a domestic allotments subsidy without any limit upon production. Mr. Roosevelt declared . . . "We must never again invite the collapse of farm prices, the stoppage of farm buying and the demoralization of business that followed the Federal Farm Board's attempt to maintain farm prices without control of farm surpluses."

From Chairman Jones comes the prediction that the House will pass a crop-control bill within two weeks of convening but admitted that it might not get through the Senate so easily. Chairman Smith, of the Senate Committee, seems to be keeping quiet as to his ideas, which, in the past, have not coincided with those of the administration. Mr. Jones and Secretary Wallace seems to be making progress in composing their past differences and his committee met last week to draft a bill. Farm organizations, farmers and officials of the Department of Agriculture have been invited to make suggestions.

Estimates of the cost of the new legislation vary but it is generally conceded that the amount will be more than the $440,000,000 being expended this year on the soil conservation plan of control. The increase may exceed $200,000,000. Besides there are the loans on cotton, expected to require more than $100,000,000 and loans on corn, certain to cost more! Plainly the money must be secured through new levies unless the budget is to be unbalanced and this is not to be countenanced by the President who has given plain notice of his views.

Administration tactics, it is believed, will permit Congressmen to raise the funds but Secretary Wallace offers suggestions that involve processing taxes on some commodities, with farmers and consumers sharing the costs. This may mean partial use of the processing tax and partial application of general funds, but whatever it means, new taxes are to be levied to equalize the new amount expended over the budget estimates.

While the present conservation program tends toward reduced production of some crops the ever-normal granary involves rigid control if surpluses appear. Whether this will be secured through "government bail" to secure voluntary cooperation, former consent to a compulsory control or a "little of both" remains to be seen.

Incidentally, farmers who dislike the control idea might consider the present cotton loans and those on corn, as well. In both instances government funds are used to lend producers more than the market price of their product, with the producer guaranteed against loss if the price drops. Under the Farm Board experiments, which brought about a loss to the treasury of more than $300,000,000, products were brought outright and held. The only difference, in essence, in the new aid thru loans is that the government demands control production so that it can protect itself against losses by restricting the next crop. Without such a control device no government could hope to give substantial assistance to farmers through loans on, or purchases of farm commodities.

Looking at Washington

the illusion of being the moon to the New Deal sun. There are some Republicans who believe that the best interests of the party would be served by identical statements from Landon and Hoover, to the effect that they will not seek the nomination in 1940 and that their only interest is to defeat the New Deal policies of President Roosevelt. By thus removing themselves they would make the way clear for other men and probably assist the mid-term convention, which the national committee meets next month, to frame a declaration of policy. Certainly, so long as both try to assert leadership the party is not apt to make any great advances.

Meanwhile, Chairman John D. Hamilton is having relatively little to say, except to lambast the administration from time to time and confer with party leaders. He favors the mid-term conference but it has not developed much power among some of the strong men in the small group of Republican Congressmen. Senator Borah says it does not reach beyond the "leaders and a few distinguished persons," and that the convention would have no authority to speak for the voters and that "one thing" the Republican leaders need is to "get in closer contact with the voters." On the other hand, Senator Edge of New Jersey, would have pre-convention "include outstanding opponents of the New Deal who may not have been heretofore identified with the Republican party."

Considerable interest is manifest in the gyrations of the stock market where sweeping gains and losses are reported from day to day, with the downward trend gradually pulling issues to lows for the past two years. Insiders put the blame on various factors including high margin requirements, stringent regulations of the Securities Exchange Commission and inability of company officials to support its stock in the market. Other experts find difficult different causes and the more candid admit that they know little or nothing about the subject. Anyway, the market is attracting attention that may be reflected in Congress when it meets.

The eighteen largest independent and emergency agencies of the government through their respective heads, will hereafter take their troubles to James Roosevelt, eldest son of the President, who has been officially named coordinator. The purpose of the order is to give access to the Chief Executive through one designated to take up problems. Confidences will be voluntary although it is plain that Mr. Roosevelt sets a high opinion upon the ability and high opinion of his son who has won high praise from Washington newspaper men for his handling of the duties of press officers. In his conference he will deal with men like Marriner S. Eccles, Frank R. McNinch, Harry L. Hopkins, Jesse H. Jones, Joseph P. Kenney and others who have top-notch rating for their accomplishments in various fields.

President Roosevelt seldom loses an opportunity to state the hope of this country that peace be brought to the nations of the world. Condemnation of the "lawlessness and strife" existing in accompanied by reassurance that the United States is firm for peace. He has reiterated the statement that the American Delegation to the conference at Brussels has not commitments except to examine the situation in the Far East and study "a peaceable means" of ending the conflict just how this policy of peace is to be effective in the situation now involving Spain and China or persuade the aggressor nations to give up resort to force remains a problem to many who are anxious that peaceful methods prevail.

There is some opinion to the effect that the United States will, if agreements is impossible, consider other methods of enforcing the 1922 treaty in regards to China but without involving this country in European difficulties—the idea being that if one international aggressor is curbed the others will soon adjust themselves to the new situation. Certainly, the American delegation will not align this country in any alliance of democracies against communism or the dictators of others.
