The Peace of the World

Armistice Day should be a day of tender and grateful recollection. Of the millions of young men who were killed in action during the great war, or who died from the effects of it, many, no doubt, were unwilling victims of conscription, but many others were martyrs, giving their lives ungrudgingly for loyalties more dear to them than life.
In our proper hatred of war, we must not confuse the issues by undervaluing the valor and the devotion which were exemplified, but rather be the more profoundly determined to take such action as will justify sacrifices.
The peace which we seek, the peace which must be made, is the peace of God and His Christ. It is the most positive, the most heroic, and the most beautiful conception that our minds can entertain. It is the realization of world-wide human unity and world-wide human fellowship in terms of forgiving and atoning and redeeming love. It is worth working for. Jesus believed that it was worth dying for. For he gave His life on Calvary.
The weapon of peace is the sword of the Spirit, which is the word of God. To pray, the day, with all its pitiful, tender, tragic associations, ever calls us.
LORD, thou canst help when earthly armour faileth;
LORD, thou canst save when deadly sin assaileth;
LORD, O'er thy rock nor death nor hell prevaileth:
Grant us peace, LORD!
212 TO 4!

News from a high school in a comparatively large city is that 216 high school girls recently voted a choice between marriage and careers, with the result being only four votes for marriage.
So what? So, nothing! In a few years at most, a majority of the girls will be married and, even then, some of them will be taken up with their careers.
Life may be so topsy-turvy that some women are willing to eliminate marriage in favor of freedom to work for themselves but the ratio is nothing like 212 to 4.

DRAW YOUR OWN MORAL

From Iowa comes the story of a mother who killed five of her seven children and herself, leaving a note reading, "I have stood all I can take, and best to take the kids along."
To two boys, 15 and 11, she wrote, "all that saves you boys is no more shells!"
Her husband was in jail at the time of the shooting. Two girls, 13, and 10, and three boys, 6, 4, and 2, "went along" with the despondent mother.
It is hard to imagine the desperation that would lead a woman into such a cold-blooded slaying of her own children. Whether her mental power snapped under some real or fancied wrong is a matter of conjecture but that life, as she faced it, was impossible is plain from her act.
The moral to be drawn from the story will vary with different individuals. For ourselves, we hazard no guess.

FARM BUYING CURTAILED

The so-called experts are wondering about the business slump and are trying to guess whether it is a "recession" or the beginning of a depression.
At the same time, they are trying to figure out the causes of the lull in business activity, with the hope of applying remedial measures.
Few of these students of business give any thought to the psychological influence of falling farm prices. They take into consideration the total farm income, estimated to be above last year, and apparently believe that the farm buying power is unimpaired.
We believe the experts will find that buying, on the part of farmers, is being sharply curtailed. Farm income, to many million farmers, is less than anticipated and, when this is the case, buying is affected. In fact many of the nations' farmers operate on credit, paying in the fall for earlier purchases, and when the prices drop unduly there is not much left for new buying.
The American farmer, in spite of all that has been done for him, is still the economic stepchild of the nation. The special session of Congress, called to legislate in his behalf, in recognition of the necessity of some permanent program but it isn't buying power—at least not as yet.

Insisting that the trade agreement policy never contemplated letting down trade barriers to permit the entry of an unreasonable amount of competitive products Secretary Hull says that it does not favor erecting barriers that would foster domestic monopoly. He added, that if the State department undertook to satisfy the complaints of those who seek nothing less than an outright outright embargo of certain imports it might well close up shop and turn the negotiations over to the lobbyists.

The workings of the reciprocal program is seen in th motor vehicle industry which reports the largest overseas business since 1929. Robert C. Graham, official of the Graham-Paige company expects sales of American motor vehicles this year to reach 680,000 units, a gain of 24 per cent over last year. He says the reciprocal program is a "vital factor" in the recovery of foreign markets and predicts that as it becomes more general the trade will sell a million cars a year abroad. He cites the Cuban agreement, which went into effect in 1934, as an outstanding example and says that in the 30 months following the agreement exports of passenger cars to the island were 8,196 units, compared to 1,712 shipped to Cuba in the 30 months before the agreement.
In securing concessions for American motor vehicles makers this country naturally had to give other nations something in return. Every effort has been made to avoid serious injury to any American interest through such concessions and, in some parts, quo limits are set, to prevent dislocation of the domestic market. It is felt that increased exports will employ labor displaced by the imports accepted, and, through the mutual concessions of the nations involved, the total commerce of each will be increased thus giving employment to other laborers. Naturally, the belief is held that agriculture will share in the improvement, just like other industries.
In fact, Secretary Hull recently affirmed that his trade pact policy was a vital farm aid, restoring markets which were removed by the old high tariff. Mr. Hull says that the Smoot-Hawley tariff "ushered in the most disastrous period in the history of American agriculture" and cites relative farm prices to sustain his contention that the farmer had "a terrible experience" with "excessive tariffs only a few short years ago."
Comparing farm prices in 1932 two years after the Smoot-Hawley bill was enacted, with those in 1936, the Secretary said that the average farm price of corn in 1932 was 28c a bushel and 77c a bushel in 1936; wheat, 39c a bushel and 96c; hogs, $3.44 a hundred and 99.17; beef cattle, $4.07 a hundred and 32.5c; wool 8.7c a pound and 26.5c. The Secretary of Agriculture also gives the average prices for the first eight months of 1937, which is higher in each instance, but admits that they were affected by the drought.
A statement issued by the "Committee of Utility Executives" says that from 1923 to 1932, the industry expended an annual average of $750,000,000 on the Administration's "punitive policy" went into effect, the average for the last five years has been only $238,600,000. This has created, according to the Committee, a construction "deficit" of $2,600,000,000. At this time although the consumption of electricity in the past two years has successfully exceeded all previous records, the industry finds capital so "frightened" that it is impossible to finance new construction which would create vast employment without cost to taxpayers.

The Federal Trade Commission recommends tightening of the anti-trust laws, with drastic restrictions on monopolistic practices. It urges amending the Clayton Act so as to declare unlawful the acquisition by corporations of the physical assets to a competing corporation which would result in monopolistic tendencies and conditions. It also recommends that the Federal Trade Commission Act be amended to declare unlawful not only "unfair methods of competition" but also "unfair and deceptive acts and practices." The idea is that this latter class primarily injures the public rather than competitor and it is difficult to show the latter type of injury as now required by the Statute.
The Trade Commission lost some of its power over price-fixing through the Miller-Tydings bill but secured enlarged power over the price discriminations through the Robinson-Patman Act. It also strives to prevent false and misleading advertising and reports that during the past year it examined 400,000 advertisements that was broadcast by radio and about 140,000 appearing in publications. Of this 2,700 appeared to be false or misleading to a degree of warranting corrective action. It has been unable to examine the advertising in all the 30,000 publications in this

WORLD COTTON SUPPLY AT NEW HIGH RECORD

A record breaking world supply of about 50,500,000 bales of cotton for the 1937-38 season is estimated by the Bureau of Agricultural Economics in its annual cotton outlook report.
The world supply of American cotton for the current season is placed at about 23,000,000 bales and the world supply of foreign cotton at 27,200,000 bales.
The Bureau attributes the substantial increase in the estimated 1937-38 supply of foreign cotton in comparison with the previous season to a marked increase in Russian, Brazilian and Chinese growths. The increase of 65 per cent in the supply of foreign cotton in comparison with the 5-year (1928-33) average is accounted for by "marked increases in these growths as well as material increases in Indian, Egyptian, and miscellaneous growths." Production of American cotton estimated in October at 17,400,000 running bales is expected to be about 42 per cent larger than the 1936 crop and the second largest in history.
Foreign production was estimated in late October at 20,100,000 bales—an increase of 10 per cent above the record crop in 1936 and an increase of 84 per cent above the 1928-32 average.
World Cotton Mill consumption during the year ended July 1937 was reported at 31,000,000 bales—a new high record. Consumption of American cotton during this period was 13,600,000 bales—slightly larger than in the preceding year, but slightly less than the 5-year average.
World consumption of foreign cotton—17,900,000 bales—was 18 per cent more than in the preceding year and 65 per cent above the 5-year average. While foreign consumption of foreign cotton increased greatly, foreign consumption of American cotton in 1936-37 declined 15 per cent below the average for the 5 year ended July 1933.
But in the United States last year the consumption of American cotton set a new high record nearly 7,800,000 bales. The Bureau says that "conditions in late October indicate that cotton during the 1937-38 season will probably be less than the previous season, but well above the average for the 5 years ended 1932-33."
The Bureau looked for a marked reduction in cotton-mill consumption in Japan and China, but a further increase in most European and a few foreign countries is expected.
Increased supplies and lower prices of American cotton relative to other growths in the early part of the season were considered "favorable to an increase in the proportion of American cotton consumed in the foreign countries in 1937-38."
The supply of cottonseed in the United States was estimated at 7,900,000 tons—the largest since 1928-27. The indicated supply of cotton seed oil (principal product of cotton seed) was reported the largest on record—the result of large stocks on hand at the beginning of the year, plus the near record production expected this season.

Another large United States seeding of wheat—for 1938 harvest—is reported in prospect, by the Bureau of Agricultural Economics in its annual wheat outlook report.
"If wheat growers respond to relatively high prices this year as they have in the past, it is probable that the acreage seeded for the 1938 harvest will not differ greatly from the 81,000,000 acres seeded for this year's crop—the largest seeded acreage in the history of the country," the Bureau says.
"An acreage of this size, with average yields and average abandonment would produce a crop of more than 1,000,000,000 bushels. The 11-bushel yield per seeded acre this year was below the 1923-32 ten-year average of 12.9 bushels. The total abandonment of wheat acreage this year was about 17.3 per cent, compared with the 10-year average of 10.2 per cent." While it is too early to forecast the yields of winter wheat the fall moisture supplies up to the middle of October suggest per acre yields in 1938 not greatly different from those in 1937. However, if dry conditions continue in some important areas the 1938 harvest probably would be below 1,000,000,000 bushels.
The Bureau points out that about 600,000,000 bushels of wheat are used annually in the United States; that with average yields, this quantity could be produced on about 56,000,000 acres. Production this year has been estimated at 877,000,000 for last year's crop was about 100,000,000 bushels.
This year's total supply of wheat—estimated at 968,000,000 bushels—is the largest since 1932. Domestic consumption plus exports may total 795,000,000 bushels in the July 1, 1938 carryover—or double the July 1, 1937 figure.
The merchant who cultivates his business usually reaps the cash crop.

ANOTHER LARGE WHEAT ACREAGE IN PROSPECT

Belleville, Ill.—Aiming a left up-percut at a spider which lowered itself in front of his face while he was driving home from work, Edward Kraft had the unhappy experience of having his car clip off a telephone pole, bend a fire hydrant and come to a halt against a tree. He and the spider were unharmed.
