THE DECLARATION OF INDEPENDENCE

On next Monday, July 4th, the people of the United States celebrate the anniversary of the signing of the Declaration of Independence.

The document proclaiming the independence of the thirteen English colonies in America, signed by the delegates to the Continental Congress, was, in some particulars, no more than a recognition of the existing states of affairs.

Undoubtedly, the Declaration of Independence ranks as one of the important documents of history. Largely drafted by Thomas Jefferson, it expresses the essence of his political philosophy.

Jefferson pointed out that prudence will dictate that government long established should not be changed for light and transient causes and that the experience of mankind has shown that men are more disposed to suffer, while evils are sufferable, than to right themselves by abolishing the form to which they are accustomed.

In other words, the Declaration of Independence proclaims the right of a people to revolution. It proclaims, very positively, the right of citizens to alter or abolish existing forms of government, when, for any reason, new forms seem more likely to promote safety and happiness.

It seems strange in this day to reflect that the Declaration of Independence, which proclaimed the principles of the colonists in their war for independence, does not express the spirit of some of the descendants of the men who fought under General Washington.

Certainly, the writer admires the handiwork of those who framed the machinery of the Federal Government. But, at the same time, because we believe in the principles expressed in the Declaration of Independence, we find ourselves more tolerant of those who advocate change.

In this connection we suggest that readers of The Enterprise, celebrating the anniversary of the historic document, take the time necessary to read its words. The reading will do them good.

AGRICULTURAL CRISIS. PARITY PAYMENTS. BANKHEAD BRAGS. BORAH WANTS TO KNOW.

(Hugo S. Sims, Washington Correspondent.)

The seriousness of the agricultural situation in the United States is appreciated when one realizes that Congress has appropriated more money for the farmers than ever before.

An even $500,000,000 covers the Soil Conservation Program and provides for benefit payments to farmers who keep their acreage within the allotment set. An additional $260,000,000 have been provided in special benefits, with $43,000,000 being available for sugar growers.

The $212,000,000 for parity payments on these five crops was voted although Congress did not follow the advice of the President who has insisted that no such payment be voted unless Congress provided the revenue necessary to make the payments.

This last appropriation is based on the theory that the farmers of the nation are entitled to "parity" incomes as compared with other groups. Previously Congress has declared that a fair return involved giving the farmers the same purchasing power, in terms of non-farm products and services, that they had in 1909-1914.

The price of the specified commodities, however, has dropped so low in recent months, that even the $212,000,000 made available by Congress is not expected to do more than give the farmers seventy-five per cent of parity prices.

Realizing that in recent years, the prices of farm commodities have been cheaper than industrial goods and services, thus placing the farmer at a serious economic disadvantage, Congress allocated the parity payments as follows: Cotton, $86,400,000; corn, $68,800,000; wheat, $53,200,000; with the balance apparently $5,000,000 going to the other crops.

As Congress closed its session, Senator Bankhead took occasion to laud the Administration's provision for the farmer, pointing out that agricultural income had increased from $4,800,000,000 in 1932 to $8,500,000,000 in 1937. He declared that the farmers' share of national income in 1932 was five per cent less than half the ratio established in 1937.

In the closing days of Congress, Senator Borah, of Idaho, urged a sweeping investigation of speculation in farm products, predicting that it would save "millions and millions of dollars" for agricultural producers. Mr. Borah effectively answered the arguments of those who contend that the farmers of this country have lost their foreign markets because of prices induced by the program followed in the past.

Senator Borah struck out against the "seemingly inspired propaganda" in urging that the committee investigate speculative operations in farm products. He pointed out that during the marketing season there is a flurry of propaganda about huge supplies and prices inevitably go down, but that as soon as the crops have moved out of the farmers' hands there are other reports that tend to raise the price.

The Federal Trade Commission has made public part one of its investigation of the farm implements and machinery industry. The industry was inspired when, in 1932, the prices of farm products fell to low levels but the prices of farm machinery seemed to be anchored in the clouds. The report states that the bulk of farm implements and machines are produced by a relatively small number of large manufacturers and that prices are maintained by extensive exchange of information about prices among the manufacturers.

In brief the report revealed a concentration of control and a system of price maintenance, defended by the Farm Equipment Institute, an agency of the manufacturers, which concealed its origin and purpose. Moreover the report disclosed the propaganda methods of the manufacturers and referred to difficulties placed in the way of certain types of farm cooperatives whose activities threatened to upset the price structure.

I KNOW FINER TOBACCO NO MISTAKE ABOUT IT... CAMEL BUYS THE FINER TOBACCO. THE PRICES THEY PAY TO GET IT PROVES WHAT I SAY. WHY, TIME AFTER TIME THEY'VE PAID ME MORE FOR MY CHOICE LOTS. THEY DID LAST SEASON TOO. I'VE SMOKED CAMELS EVER SINCE I LEARNED TO GRADE TOBACCO. MEN WHO GROW TOBACCO MOST ALWAYS GO FOR CAMELS. MARVIN L. SPEIGHT SMOKES tobacco because he KNOWS IT. YOU can't tell the men who grow tobacco that all cigarettes are alike. Year after year, grown like this. Special have been. Camel pay more to get the best lots of their crops. And because they know Camel use CHOICE, MORE EXPENSIVE TOBACCO, they say: "We smoke Camels because we know fine tobacco makes finer smoking." Try Camels yourself and see!
