BIRD NOTES
At the Bird Club meeting this week, Charles Joyner read a selection regarding the Carolina Wren, which is a year round singer and has a diversity of strains. It is a trifle smaller than the English Sparrow and is a bright shade of brown above and has a whitish throat. The wings and tail are finely barred with black.
Charles found that the bird is a lyrical songster, singing throughout the year; is friendly like all Tar Heels and can easily be coaxed about the house or garden by feeding stations, water cover and protection. It is a persistent insect hunter; insects forming practically its entire diet.
The Carolina Wren's nesting period usually begins in May and it will choose a site almost anywhere. The eggs, four to six in number, are white or creamy white. The nest is a bulky affair but is cleverly camouflaged.

ouafage. Wrens are full of curiosity and have a love for investigating. Following the program bird houses were made and apples were enjoyed.
