Harvest Pulpwood By Selective Cutting Uncle Sam has asked all North Carolina farmers to join in a program which would step up the production of pulpwood to fifteen million tons in 1945. E. W. Graeber, extension forester at N. C. State College, says that those who take a part in this national program should practice selective cutting because it is desirable under most conditions and because this method of handling the woodland provides more frequent cutting and larger cash returns over a period of years than does clear cutting. "It is important to know what types of trees to take out in cutting pulpwood," Graeber said. "It is also important to cut the timber stand properly. The key to a productive forest is to maintain a good growing stock. Always leave a good stand of trees." All trees which are to be taken out should be carefully marked and especially so where the job of harvesting is to be turned over to others. If a grower is not familiar with timber marketing he should see his county agent or consult with the regional forester. Sometimes it is best to remove several timber products, such as saw-logs, poles and pulpwood, at one operation. Before marketing pulpwood, Graeber suggests that the owner go over his woods and estimate the number of cords to be removed. Definite contracts on the amount of wood to be taken out should be made in advance of any cutting. The sales contract should specify the trees to be cut, the period of cutting, payment for the timber, damaged to unmarked trees and other points, he pointed out.

Protect Fruit Trees By Using Repellent

A new repellent to protect fruit trees from rabbits has been announced by L. C. Whitehead, district agent for the Division of Wildlife Research with headquarters at N. C. State College. He said that the repellent is used as a paint and is effective, durable and safe. It should be applied with a brush, and one gallon will treat from 200 to 300 seedlings over all for a season. Larger trees will, of course, require more paint to give complete trunk protection. The repellent is prepared at the U. S. Pocatello Supply Depot of Pocatello, Idaho. If local dealers do not carry it, requests for a supply may be referred to the county agent or the U. S. Wildlife Service at N. C. State College, Raleigh. Since many growers will need only relatively small amounts of the repellent, farmers are urged to pool their requests, so that shipping charges may be reduced to a minimum. The paint is composed of rasy, ethylene dichloride, asphalt emulsion, copper sulphate, copper carbonate, and dry lime sulphur. When painted on the trunks of fruit trees with a brush, the repellent will effectively protect the trees from rabbits.

Grows Beef Cattle On Practical Basis

Many North Carolina growers of beef cattle are doing a thoroughly practical job in livestock production, says L. I. Case, extension animal husbandman of N. C. State College. C. W. Mayo of Tarboro is a good example. Mayo has always kept his production of feed ahead of his number of cattle, Case said. The Edgecombe farmer has one old permanent pasture and two new ones, all of which have received limestone and phosphate. In addition to his permanent pastures, he uses lespedeza as a supplementary grazing crop, when needed. Otherwise, the lespedeza is cut for hay or allowed to produce seed. He also has a silo, and a part of the silage is reserved for the spring, after his grazing crops are eaten down and before the permanent pastures are ready. This fills a gap in the feeding program, which uses livestock growers' feed. Mayo started in the beef cattle business through the use of a registered Hereford bull on cows of dairy breeding. He still has some of these grade dairy cows and last year steers calves from them, born from January to April, sold in October for an average of $64 per head. At present, he has nine registered Hereford cows and heifers of serviceable age and three yearling heifers, in addition to the calves at foot. He has sixty head of grade cattle of other kinds, all in good flesh. He has practiced controlled breeding and all of his calves are dropped in early spring. In this way, they can be weaned at the same time. In commenting on the excellent record of Mayo, specialist Case also called attention to the third annual association sale of Herefords at Wilson on April 16, when about 20 bulls and 40 females of excellent quality will be offered.

New Lespedeza Used For Wildlife Feed

More than 450 farmers in North Carolina are seeding a new lespedeza called "biolor" this spring for wildlife and soil conservation, says Verne E. Davidson of the Soil Conservation Service in a report to the Extension Service at N. C. State College. The lespedeza is a perennial and grows from 6 to 10 feet high. Tests in the Soil Conservation Service nursery at Chapel Hill and observations in surrounding states prove that biolor seed is an excellent food for bobwhites and that rabbits eat the bark of the plants readily. A total of 2,438 pounds of seed have been distributed in 69 counties in North Carolina for use as woodland borders, hedges and on rough and odd shaped areas that growers are willing to leave for wildlife cover and food, Davidson points out. Shrubby lespedeza can be established by direct seed, live for many years without reestablishment, are not harmed by burning, cutting, or rabbit damage in winter, and very attractive in August and September with their masses of purple flowers, Davidson says. They answer a long search for a perennial lespedeza to replace annual plants for bird-food patches.

TOBACCO

The income from tobacco last year was 483 million dollars for the United States, and for North Carolina it was 231 million.

What You Buy With WAR BONDS Actual experience on the world's war fronts has proved the collapsible boat an essential safety feature for both Naval and land based planes. They are made of rubberized material, easily inflated. At the Battle of Midway an Army Lieutenant, after bombing a carrier, was forced to bail out of his bomber. He was able to get a "fish eye" view of the entire battle from his collapsible boat and was later picked up by an American plane. Your purchase of War Bonds with at least ten percent of your income every payday will help protect the lives of men who are flying for you. Get behind them today. U. S. Treasury Department.
