A Better Fire Protection Needed For Farm Forests

The first need of farm forestry in North Carolina right now is more efficient fire control and a realization on the part of every one just how much damage can result from a wood's fire, says regional Farm Forester H. E. Blanchard of the N. C. State College Extension Service.

Swap-Work Plan Helps Farm Labor Shortage

Swapping labor for combine service in cutting small grains was developed at a recent farm labor meeting in Randolph County, says J. P. Leagans, Extension Specialist in Farm Planning at N. C. State College.

It was developed that 73 farmers had 9 combines and only two of them were planning to do custom work. They were all familiar with the fact that during the harvesting season for grain, other crops such as cotton and corn would have to be worked out.

According to Leagans, a plan was worked out whereby the neighbors, who needed combine work, agreed to go over and work out the row crops of the combine owners in exchange for combine service on their own grain.

Leagans says that this is a good example of the swap-work program and that he is sure that practical minded growers will work out many others. Recently the women and children on three farms began a co-operative project of weeding all the tobacco beds while the men did the heavy work.

Leagans pointed out that the swap-work program will help to solve the labor shortage in many sections by using all available labor on the job for which it is best fitted and by making full use of all machinery and equipment.

A Better Fire Protection Needed For Farm Forests

Blanchard cites a case where fire got into a growth of timber that was on land that had not been burned over for 35 years. He reports that not more than fifty percent of the saw timber will survive the fire and that only 10 percent of the young growth is left.

In another case, the land had not been burned in 22 years. The timber was cut on a selective basis about five years ago and was well stocked with reproduction trees at the time of the fire. These reproduction trees are now practically all killed and must be salvaged for pulpwood.

On account of the large losses experienced, the farmers owning the woodlands declared that they were going to burn off their woods in the future to avoid any repetition of such a hot fire. However, the forester called their attention to the fact that repeated fires in the woods will kill out all the young growth, seriously damage the larger timber, and that experience proves that yearly burning is poor policy. Better fire protection is the answer.

CHICKENS

Farmers are asked to raise an extra 200,000,000 chickens in 1945. Some has figured that these chickens will require about 20 billion tons of extra feed, if they are made to weigh 3 pounds each.

SUGAR

It is reported that banana boats will bring in an extra 200,000 tons of sugar so that there will be plenty for canning this summer.

Blackleg Cattle Disease Becoming More Prevalent

The blackleg disease, which affects cattle, sheep and goats, is becoming more prevalent, says Dr. C. D. Grinnell, Experiment Station Veterinarian at N. C. State College. He reports that cases have occurred frequently in the mountain counties of North Carolina and that the disease may be expected to be brought in from other states, due to the added traffic in livestock now taking place. The trouble is widespread in livestock areas, especially in the "range country" and in the Mississippi Valley.

According to Grinnell, the disease is caused by a spore-forming germ or bacterium. The spore lives in the soil and, once a pasture area is infected, the disease is liable to reappear yearly in susceptible animals, unless they are vaccinated. The losses are largely in cattle.

The disease attacks cattle from four months to two years of age, Grinnell says, and the first noticeable symptom is lameness. This is generally followed by a swelling, with a high temperature and marked depression, usually resulting in death within a few days.

Although treatment for this disease is not highly successful, veterinarians have saved some animals by using large amounts of blackleg serum. Where the disease is known to exist, the animals should be vaccinated in late winter or the early spring months. Experience shows that an occasional death follows vaccination.

Although blackleg is not yet a serious threat to the livestock industry of North Carolina, outbreaks should be guarded against, cautioned Dr. Grinnell.

If a buyer loses his case, he can sometimes get another trial. A doctor can't.
