Poultrymen Cooperate To Conserve Proteins

North Carolina hatcherymen and commercial poultrymen are working closely with State Department and Agricultural Extension officials in the effort to conserve protein feed and to increase protein production.

The conference group unanimously agreed that all poultry raisers should be encouraged to utilize green feeds to the fullest to help compensate for the slightly lowered protein levels and to help maintain better health in the poultry flocks, Brown said.

In line with the needs of conservation, the hatcherymen offered to cooperate by discouraging the sale of chicks intended for laying purposes between the dates of June 1 and September 1. They feel that wartime needs call for emergency measures and they planned to cooperate in every phase of the program for keeping the rapidly expanding poultry industry of the state on a firm and conservative basis.

The hatcherymen decided to hold a two-day educational and business meeting this summer in Raleigh and details of the program will be announced later.

Beef Cattle Win Fight Against Boal Weevils

At Enterprise, Alabama, cotton growers erected a monument to the boll weevil but here in North Carolina E. L. Ward of Edenton has built a fine herd of commercial beef cattle on a practical basis which any grower can follow, says L. L. Case, Extension Animal Husbandry Specialist at N. C. State College.

Today Ward has 40 Sereford cows and 85 head of yearlings. He practices systematized breeding and his entire calf crop is dropped during the month of March and April. He grows a large acreage of temporary grazing crops for both the winter and summer, and this practice helps to keep his feed costs at a low level.

The cattle came through the winter in excellent condition and they have enough temporary grazing crops to carry them until the time when the permanent pastures are lush. Then, later on there will be lespedeza and
