

Veterans Barred From 'GP Bill Of Rights For Abusing Privileges And Misrepresenting Facts

Thirty-six veterans of World War II have been barred from any further benefits under the Servicemen's Readjustment Allowance provisions of the G. I. Bill of Rights because of fraud in connection with drawings of these benefits, it is announced by Chairman Henry E. Kendall, of the Employment Security Commission of North Carolina, the agency administering this phase of the veteran program.

Twenty-five of these veterans have been ordered by the U. S. District Attorneys in their respective districts to refund more than $3,000 they received through fraudulent action, the most usual having been for failure to report any earnings or sufficient earnings during weeks for which they earned wages and were also paid benefits.

Chairman Kendall does not receive reports of all prosecutions of veterans in Federal Courts but has been advised that Roy E. Jones, Jr., Durham, was ordered to refund $60 he received through fraud, pay a fine of $100 and remain under probation for one year. David McKinnon, Durham, was ordered to refund $240 and remain under probation for a year.

Naval Vignettes

Two 19-year-old Seabees flushed an enemy out of hiding near their Saipan base during the war. When the Jap hopefully asked, in English, if they found him through his footprints, or through some equally clever method of deduction, they blurted: "Gosh no! We damn near fell over you!"

Wounded down with humiliation over such loss of face, the prisoner marched off to the stockade, muttering morosely, "Kids! Just kids!"

Two elderly Australians eyed with frank suspicion the CB emblem on the sleeve of the hard-bitten man in U. S. Navy dress as the Seabee relaxed in a train bound for Melbourne during the war.

"Aren't you supposed to be back in camp?" one finally blurted out.

"No, I've got a pass," the Navy construction worker answered. "I'm an American Seabee," he added as an after-thought.

"Beg pardon," said the Australian. "Down here, old man, 'CB' means 'confined to barracks'."

"You can tell that the father of a good sized family designed that job," purred the senior surgeon of a native hospital as he viewed the 50 baby cribs just delivered by the Seabees stationed on that Pacific island during the war.

The craftsman, it developed later, was a 20-year-old Seabee carpenter who didn't even have a girl friend!

Sharks attracted by dead fish killed by under-water blasting were like money in the bank to some Seabees in the forward areas during the war. The Navy's gun-wielding, Jap-baiting construction workers would shoot the scavenging sharks, remove their backbones, insert a steel rod in each, polish it and sell it as a souvenir came, some of which sold for as high as $75.

Someone asked a Seabee how he had reacted to Jap shell-fire on Bougainville.

"Well, sir," the hard-bitten construction man replied, "one day my mate and I heard a shell pass overhead. We took off for a foxhole 50 yards away. After the bombardment, we discovered that we'd lost our dog tags. We had been running so close to the ground that we'd stepped on them and snapped them off!"

Three Seabees were discoursing on the Jap mortar barrage which had driven their pontoon crew to cover on the Luzayan-Gulf shore in the Philippines. All night the three huddled in a steel tool compartment while mortar fragments rattled around them.

"This isn't as bad as Tinian," one mused philosophically. "There we went through one of these barrages and when morning came we found we had been hiding all night behind three cases of American beer"

The Navy's Seabees established a reputation for getting things done in a hurry during the war. A typical report of the manner in which this tradition was upheld deals with a landing craft which ran up on a reef and sank at an advanced base. The commodore gave the Seabees 14 days to put it back into floating condition. The dock officer promised the commodore it would be ready in seven days. They did it in four.

Plans Completed For American Legion Fair

Directors of the American Legion Fair in Greenville, announces that plans for the twelfth annual presentation of the event are complete and the Fair will open on schedule, Monday, Oct. 20, to run throughout the week, closing Saturday, Oct. 25.

A crew of men as seen at work the past two weeks and much rebuilding, cleaning and general repairing has been accomplished, with but minor details yet to be looked after.

Restrictions of the war years now have been lifted and considerable expansion is contemplated for this year's event, part of this to include the erection of two large exhibit tents to accommodate the extra demand for space on the part of potential exhibitors.

With two weeks before the opening, fair officials expressed surprise at the number of applications for exclusive farm machinery, home appliances and merchandise booths. A state ruling last year which prohibited the showing of poultry has been lifted for this season and entries will be open to domestic birds of all varieties.

The amusement angle of the fair will not be overlooked, and in addition to one of the biggest fair midways now on tour, and free acts, the biggest display of fireworks ever to be presented in the county will be given nightly.

The yearly advance sale of tickets is now under way through members of the Greenville and Farmville Posts of the Legion. The Greenville office of the fair is again located at the office of J. Hicks Corey, 515 Dickinson avenue, Gastonville.

scrap fish are being processed for a ready market. Croatan Frozen Foods, Inc., of Morehead City learned that if the fish is ground up like sausage the U. S. Fish and Wild Life Service's rodent exterminating division would buy quantities of it to be mixed with rat poison.
