BIRD CLUB

Chandler Cox read an article on the prairie horned lark at Saturday's meeting of the Bird club. The State Bird club has requested that notes on observations during the summer of this bird as well as the house wren and long sparrow be sent to them.

The prairie horned larks have been extending their breeding range in this section during recent years. They are found at sometime during the year in all parts of North America except the Aleutian Islands, the southern coastal portion of Alaska, the extreme southeastern United States and Central America.

Small but hardy birds which frequent the open country and never live in forests, they are found in a great variety of situations and feed along roads, in weedy or freshly plowed fields, on commons or waste places and in closely grazed pastures, meadows and stubble fields.

Never complex, nor loud, the song is wildly joyous and full of the free spirit of the prairies and open fields.

The horned lark by its services to agriculture, which cannot be estimated in dollars and cents, earns a right to live and deserves protection from man.

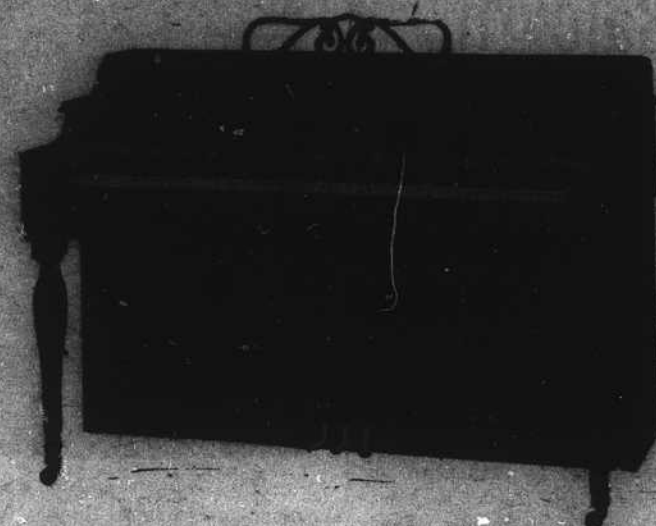

Donald Bullock was welcomed as a new member.

An auto trip to the country, where young puppies, calves and pigs were sources of great interest, was made.
