THEY CALL IT "PROGRESSIVE"
(Christian Science Monitor)

Henry Wallace and his followers had a successful convention — from their standpoint. They got much publicity, they generated great enthusiasm, and they skated over a split between their Communists and non-Communists.

On-the-spot observers have been most impressed by the energy and enthusiasm of the Wallaceites. Youth has been enlisted in marked degree. The new party, which has now formally taken the name, Progressive, also has a strong attraction for many who are usually described by another fine word—idealists. The considerable number of Americans who believe war can be avoided by making concessions to Russia make a majority of this group. In addition are the convinced radicals, certain labor groups and others who feel "put-up-on." Not to be omitted are the Communists, few perhaps in numbers but large in influence.

Its most immediate practical purpose is to subtract votes from liberal Republicans or Democrats running for office. This is expected to be most noticeable in contests for Congress and state political observers are predicting the Wallaceites will succeed in making the next Congress the most reactionary in recent history.

Another danger is the possible effect in the field of foreign policy. The "Wallace or War" slogan is recklessly misleading—particularly when no one expects it to be Wallace. We trust that only a limited number of citizens will be led to action that would weaken the united front which the American people should present at this time. We trust, too, that friends and opponents abroad will not misread the signs. Sometimes the Russians are deceived by their own propaganda, and a miscalculation in Moscow today could make the Wallaceites gravely responsible without their ever coming to power.

Undoubtedly, many sincere and earnest people are enlisted under the Wallace banner. That is one of the worst things about the new party—it makes these people hostages of Communism. It draws aside into a backwash large numbers of voters who could bring into the other parties needed fresh currents of liberal thinking and humanitarian purpose.

GIANT STEPS are being taken

Attention telephone service today is rapidly expanding. Local and long distance telephone traffic is so in point. A constantly increasing number of new telephone lines are being installed — switchboard facilities expanded — new equipment added.

In spite of this expansion program, however, some service is still waiting for service. This is caused by a shortage of qualified telephone linemen and an increasing demand for telephone service.

We hope that the great strides being taken today will result in better service and everyone desiring service will have it soon.
