By attacking through the public press two figures of national prominence, Francis Cardinal Spellman appears to have killed any chances of getting the current Congress to appropriate federal funds for education. Several weeks ago, the Catholic churchman called Congressman Graham Barden of New Bern, sponsor of Edwin Coates, program director for the bill which would prohibit—and funds for parochial schools, a bigot. Last week, Cardinal Spellman attacked Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt for, of all things, her intolerance. In her syndicated column, Mrs. Roosevelt had expressed an opinion that public funds should not be used for parochial schools. In my opinion, Mrs. certainly not for her intolerance. Nor is Congressman Barden a bigot, simply because his opinions differ with those held by Cardinal Spellman whose violation of a prime command "judge not that ye be not judged," will mean that federal support for
