Sixteen Years After.

The Second Day at Gettysburg. Longstreet's Attack on Sickles. The Terrible Struggle for Round Top. Hood Said it was a Fight of Savages.

Scrappings.

When you tell a young lady that she is winsome and fair, she accuses you of flattery, but she believes it even if you had not told her.

Longstreet's Attack on Sickles.

It was daybreak of the 2d of July, 1863. On the hills—the valleys—spread over fields—hidden in the woods around Gettysburg were 200,000 men making ready for a terrible battle.

Longstreet's Attack on Sickles.

By daybreak to 8 o'clock one standing on Round Top could see regiments, brigades and divisions moving in every direction.

Longstreet's Attack on Sickles.

Along the Federal front, but the real movement is against Sickles, who has thrown a part of his force out in front of Round Top...
