THE COLD SNAP AND THE CROPS.

Effect in Dakota and Minnesota-Fruit Damaged in the West and South.

ST, PAUL, April 13.-The promise of an early seeding has been banished by various causes, and, although the season is early and warm, seeding will not be generally under way in the Northwest much before May. The heavy rains of last fall left the ground saturated, and to a great extent prevented the usual fall plowing, thus reducing the acreage. Three weeks ago farmers in many sections were ready or had begun their spring seeding, when heavy rains occurred which, in many cases, put an end to the work. In some of the high and well-drained lands in northern Minnesota, notably in Kittson and Marshall counties, seeding is going on; also in portions of northern and southern Dakota back from the streams. Added to other drawbacks in northern Minnesota and Dakota was the late heavy snow storm, which extended through the Red River Valley. The sudden melting of the snow has cent the Red, James and Chevenne Rivers out of their banks, overflowing large tracks of country and preventing farm work, as well as doing other damage. There will be a notable decrease of acreage of wheat in southern Minnesota, and a corresponding increase in acreage in other grains, and of land set aside for stock raising. There is certainly an increase in the wheat acreage in the northern counties. Though this item has been reduced by the fall rains which prevented plowing, and as the rains affected all parts of the State alike, it is doubtful if the increase in the north will balance the decrease in the south, and it is likely that Minnesota will show in 1882, for the first time in the history of the State, a decrease in the number of acres devoted to wheat raising. Dakota, on the other hand, is sure to show a large increase from the opening of new lands west of the Red River and in the James and Chevenne valleys. The amount of old wheat left in farmers' hands in Minnesota, is estimated at 4,000,000 bushels. Manitoba. which is rapidly coming into prominence as a wheat producing country, will have
