THE TIME TO DANCE

By I. WRIGHT

Mary Wilson threw her knapsack on the ground, unbuckled the camper's stove from her shoulder and loosened the roll that made up her bed and blankets. It had been heavier than she had anticipated, and the hike through the woods to the lake had been nearly a mile longer than she had thought.

Working in an office as she did for eleven and a half months of the year, it seemed good to think of being alone and quiet for these two weeks. More than that, the spot had a certain attraction for her, inasmuch as she had once, ignored out there on an early Sunday morning when John Smith had been one of the party. She thought of John Smith now, and tried to make her lip curl derisively as she thought of her name had she married him—Mary Smith, the wife of John Smith. The lip would not curl in the approved manner, for Mary Wilson knew that had John Smith ever said the least word she would have leaped at the chance of being Mary Smith.

He had taken her to several dances, had invited her out to dine four times, had bought tickets for the theater some half-dozen times. As she sat about making camp she wondered if she had been foolish to come off here by herself. The other girls in the office all went to gay summer resorts where they would meet men.

"You're foolish, Mary Wilson," Sophie Shonman had told her. "If John Smith doesn't speak up and 'spress himself—well, the best thing you can do is to get another sweetie. No girl wants to reach thirty—unmarried."

Mary Wilson had opened her mouth to speak, but Sophie had raised one hand hastily. "Don't try to lie out of it, Mary, I'm a woman and I've seen that you love him. It's nothing to be ashamed of, is it? The thing is this—many a girl has not made an impression on the man she wanted—and she took some other. After all, marriage is much the same—full of fights after the first year."

Mary Wilson had been silent. It was nothing to be ashamed of, she mentally agreed, to love John Smith. But to marry some one else just to be Mrs. or for the sole pleasure of showing the world that she had captured a husband—ugh! And Mary Wilson had set about making preparations to camp alone at the spot where she and John Smith had gayly cooked fish over an open fire and eaten them quickly while they were hot from the pan.

Going over to the stove she began to set it up to get supper. She heard a car on the road and wondered if John could be stopping. She did not turn, however.

"I beg pardon," came a man's voice behind her. She whirled about; there never, she knew, was another voice besides John's which was just like that.

"Why, Mary," he stammered. "Why—"

She laughed at his amazement. "What's the matter? Men go camping, don't they, without anyone making such a great to-do about it. Why should I—"

"It's not that," he said. "I—only I thought you didn't care about anything except dancing and dinners and theaters. I supposed your main aim in life was to dance."

She turned to put a slice of bacon in the hot frying pan. "I do love to dance," she said frankly, "but there is a time to dance and a time to camp. This is the time to eat. If you're hungry—"

"You bet I'm hungry," he said suddenly. "I'm starved. I have my two weeks' vacation and my uncle lent me his car for it. I thought I'd camp here. Why, I have a cooking outfit and a box of fishing tackle." He was eating now, cutting pieces after pieces of bread and spreading butter on hers for her rapidly. Deftly she saw him lift the hot bacon from the pan and put it on the bread.

"I—I've been a fool, Mary. I thought you wouldn't care for this sort of thing and, you know, cooped up in an office all year—I just have to get away like this on my two weeks. I wonder if all this stuff would be safe here—if we left for an hour or so?"

"Why, why?" she gasped, her heart thumping.

"Well, I was sort of thinking this would be a jolly sort of honeymoon—I have an extra fishing pole—and we could be married up in the next town. If we hustle before the clerk's office closes."

He was standing now, looking at her. "Besides, that's a peach of a stove you have there—that bacon was A1—"

"They say," said Mary demurely, "that cooking is the way to a man's heart and I—guess—"

But John Smith was pulling her to her feet and she found herself almost running with him, hand in hand, toward the car waiting in the roadway.

Rubberseed Oil. An oil similar to linseed oil is extracted from the seed of rubber trees and the residue used as fodder. A mill has been set up in Malaya and small consignments have been sold in Europe at good prices. Under present conditions on the rubber plantations, seed for this purpose is easily secured.—Scientific American.

YESTERDAY'S MARKETS

NEW YORK COTTON

NEW YORK, Dec. 2.—The cotton market was very quiet again today. There appeared to be a little southern selling and some further liquidations which accounted for an opening decline of 1/2 to 1 1/2 points, but the market was fairly steady around 25 cents for January during the early trading on covering for over the week-end. There was a good deal of bullish comment on the increased export movement, but it seemed to bring in no aggressive support and the market so narrow that it responded to comparatively small orders either way. Reports from the cotton goods markets indicated a quiet trade with mills generally holding for full prices, but with second hand offering to cloth slightly easier. After selling up to 25.11 for January on covering, the market weakened later in the morning on rumors of bearish ginning figures. January sold off to 24.82 and closed at 24.99 with the general market closing steady unchanged so nine points lower. The cotton market closed steady.

	High	Low	Close
December	25.50	24.90	24.99
January	25.11	24.82	24.99
March	25.17	24.97	25.05
May	25.05	24.87	24.98
July	24.73	24.55	24.61

CHICAGO GRAIN

CHICAGO, Dec. 2.—Wheat took an upward swing during the early dealings today because of commission houses buying of May and July. The return was not retained, however, sentiment here being inclined to be rather bearish with a light speculative trade. The opening which ranged from 7 3/8 to 7 7/8 cent net higher was followed by a moderate decline all around. Corn and oats started strong in scattered local selling. Support however, was lacking. After opening unchanged to 1-4@ 3-8 cent higher corn eased off on all deliveries. Oats started a shade to 1-4 cent up, and later underwent a general decline. Revisions lacked support. Wheat closed weak with values showing a new decline of 5-8 to 7-8. Corn closed at a net loss of 3-4 to 1-4 cents.

ROGER MOORE CALLS CHILD'S CONFERENCE

Continued from page 1. Her that the situation may be brought to everyone's attention with a plea for extension of child welfare activities. A recent conference of Rotarians was held in Raleigh and at this time plans for the meeting Tuesday were discussed. Mr. Moore is said to have received assurances from the Civitan, Lion, Masonic, Knights of Pythias, Woman's clubs and other organizations throughout the state to send representatives to the joint conference.
