LESS LAWLESS CHRISTMAS

It is refreshing to find one newspaper that sees some improvement in the public in regard to observance of the laws. The Charlotte Observer finds that Christmas showed a lessening of law defiance.

The after-Christmas news service running through the papers carry the incidents of shootings—accidents and intentional—of automobile casualties along the countryside and at crossings of road alcohol in territories with healthful enforcement of the killings of prohibition officers and bootleggers in balance sheet proportions.

Yet there never was an athletic competition offered such rewards as the competitions of business offer. There never was an athletic competition in which failure was attended by such dire results as in the case of business failure.

And the fact of the matter is that only those who painstakingly and self-sacrificingly get ready to win in business need ever hope to emerge as victors in business' manifold contests.

Failure to train for the struggles of business, neglect to keep physically and mentally fit, to develop their powers to the maximum—herein we have for multitudes of business aspirants the real explanation of the reserves and disappointments which are forever their lot.

care of his body that the athlete does, not that he will go to the extreme of the athlete, but that he will go far enough, to preserve a physical vigor without which the best work can never be done in any occupation.

The majority, to all appearance, either rate business success as of less account than an athletic triumph, or else entertain the curious notion that training methods are quite unnecessary so far as succeeding in business is concerned.

They eat about as they please, too often to the extent of habitual overeating. Lat hours mean nothing to them, except as affording additional time for amusement-seeking.

PUBLIC FORUM

To the Editor of The Goldsboro News:

Now comes one W. O. Butler and protests because I ask volunteer reformers to refrain from acting as gross agents to Fatty Arbuckle. I would have the press and the great news gathering agencies of the country to leave the "Palastoff of the Movies" out of it unless he paid regular advertising rates and under no circumstances would I place him on the front or editorial page.

This is my complaint on the Arbuckle discussion. Personally I care nothing for reformers who admit that they are doing the public a great service in airing their views when it costs them nothing.

Now as a matter of law, let us see whether Arbuckle is a great "criminal" as has been stated in the columns of the Goldsboro News. In this country a person is presumed to be innocent until he is proven guilty by competent evidence beyond a reasonable doubt and that matter must be passed upon by a jury.

In this case the jury said "not guilty." Who is the better to judge, one who sits in a jury box under oath and hears all the evidence or a casual observer across the continent? Then again it has been said that he is a criminal because liquor was served at his party.

The other day in the halls of congress a representative from Georgia charged that many members of congress were disqualified because they drank liquor in violation of the eighteenth amendment. It was forthwith admitted that many prohibition advocates in congress had well stocked cellars and took a drink when they felt like it.

But it was contended that the eighteenth amendment merely prohibited the manufacture and sale of liquor and had nothing to do with the drinking thereof. This is a matter of record and the head of the Anti-Saloon League declared that Senator-elect Edwards of New Jersey had no right to favor modification of the Volstead act because he is a teetotaler, but that it was all right for a drinking congressman to favor an arid American.

Thus the discussion goes. Congressmen say that it isn't wrong to take a drink if you have it but at the same time either call Fatty a great criminal because he served liquor at a party.

SOUTH AFRICAN TRIP KILLED ROOSEVELT

BOSTON, Dec. 29.—An Indian tribe of South America ruled entirely by women was described recently by Dr. A. Hamilton Rice in a lecture before the Lowell Institute.

The tribe lives on the Lena river, a branch of the upper Amazon where Dr. Rice went on a trip of exploration.

The women of the tribe are said to be permanent residents of the village. Dr. Rice said, while the men who were there came mostly from tribes along the river Guiana. The ancient Amazonian legend of a tribe of self-supporting women, visited from time to time by men of other tribes, came to the explorer's mind with his discovery, he said, and indicated to him that he might

During his lecture, Dr. Rice was asked if he believed that former President Roosevelt's life had been shortened by the effects of his South African journey. He replied:

"Yes, he died from the effects of his journey to South Africa. There was not a doctor in New York who knew what ailed him."

The object of Dr. Rice's exploration was mainly to determine the character of the country surrounding the Milla, Meaya and Inipida rivers, and to identify these rivers.

At San Martin he found 800 persons, served by three priests who bemoaned their lack of knowledge of medicine. Many of their parishioners were suffering from disease. Dr. Rice's examinations developed that they carried the certain form of malarial parasite and the epidemic skin disease known as pinta, a particularly disfiguring form. Daily Dr. Rice was begged for relief by the sufferers.

The old La Sal-Colama trail across the Vega in the rainy season caused Dr. Rice's party much difficulty. For nearly 45 miles the trail crosses a chain of swamps and quagmires through which the natives of the party floundered naked, cursing and whipping the pack animals before them.

Big Campaign Ahead

There is a big construction program ahead for this organization, say the directors and members scattered thru-

STANDARD OIL AS AN ADVERTISER

The Standard Oil Company, the parent organization with its numerous offspring, doubtless has produced more real money for its stockholders than any other corporation in existence. So far as its mere business plans are suggested, accepted, arranged and carried out undoubtedly it is a model of efficiency.

The way that this great business organization, and its rivals who were not laggard in experiment, discovery and exploitation, brought this use of highly refined oil to public notice was through the advertising columns of the daily newspapers.

THE NEW IDEA OF FITNESS

The idea of mental and physical fitness for men of business and for all who would play an important part in life has been growing for some time. Mental and physical fitness are correlative, each necessary to the other. Eventually all educational methods will have for their motif this one idea.
