PAYS TRIBUTE TO THE THIRTIETH DIVISION

By EMMA R. EDWARDS

An enthusiastic Goldsboro audience had the privilege of hearing a scholarly well-informed English army officer talk on post-war problems, and more particularly the relation of America and the British Empire, when Lt. Colonel Graham Seton Hutchinson of London, spoke last night at 8:30 o'clock at the Wayne County court house.

Col. Hutchinson came to Goldsboro at the invitation of Major W. W. Pierce of this city whom he met and fought beside in France. During his stay here he is the guest of Major and Mrs. Pierce at their home on North Slocomb street. He was prevailed upon by the civic organizations of the city to deliver a public address.

The distinguished visitor came to America with a delegation of 114 British business and profession men who met in convention with Americans last week in Atlantic City for the purpose of promoting friendly relations between the United States and the "mother country." From Atlantic City the delegation went to Washington where they were welcomed by President Harding. Next year a group of American business men will meet at a similar session in London.

Col. Hutchinson charmed his audience from the moment he first entered the courtroom. He spoke in excellent English, and his complexity of mind showed through in his every word. He is a soldierly gentleman, though he was agreeably nonchalant during his short informal talk which brought many a laugh and much spontaneous applause.

A feature of the gathering was the entry of the American Legion, Wayne Post, the boys club in khaki and marching by twos to the seats reserved for them. Following came also the girl scouts in uniform; the boy scouts being absent at camp, did not appear.

The speaker was introduced by Rev. Peter McIntyre who remarked that last night's occasion was reminiscent of war days, when men from other countries came to talk with us. Rev. McIntyre referred to Col. Hutchinson as a Scotchman by birth, a soldier by training, and a friend to America through contact with American soldiers in France.

Col. Hutchinson told of his motive in coming to America, his friendship with Major Peirce, and the routing of some movie-fiction notions he had entertained regarding Westerners, southerners and other native Americans. His subject "Post War Problems" he approached by saying modestly that he was his own post-war problem, not knowing what to do after the signing of the armistice, since he had been fitted from early manhood for the fighting profession.

Col. Hutchinson is now engaged in the advertising business. Touching upon the cordial relationship of the British and American troops in France, he said that the first impression of the Tar Heels of the 30th Division was that they were the largest men in the tightest trousers and the smallest hats that Europe had ever seen. On further acquaintance, however, that impression was somewhat modified and the Americans were found to be the biggest hearts of any men the English had ever met. They chummed together, exchanging beer, cigarettes, and chewing gum, the latter habit having been introduced by the Americans.
