DID YOU KNOW THESE FACTS

Did you know that Julius Caesar was the runt of the family and all the boys picked on him at school and called him a sissy?

And that Napoleon Bonaparte, when he was in kilts, was so excessively modest and shrinking that his mother often had to spank him to make him show off before company?

And that John Wesley was given to saying bad words at the age of seven?

And that Georgia Washington, previous to the cherry-tree incident, was such an incorrigible little liar that his father had to punish him almost every day? (That was the reason the old gentleman made so much fuss when he found that Georgia wouldn't lie about the cherry tree.)

And that both DeWolf Hopper and Raymond Hitchcock up to the age of ten had no other thought than that of entering the ministry in the Presbyterian church? (Note that both these gentlemen have never been able to get rid of their ministerial voices.)

And that John D. Rockefeller in his school boy days was a notorious little spendthrift, and gave away marbles and jackknives with alarming prodigality?

And that Einstein up to the time he was twelve, was never able to do an example in long division, nor tell where to put the decimal point?

And that neither Caruso nor Geraldine Farrar could carry the simplest tune in their childhood days, and invariably sulked and cried when they had to take their music lessons?

And that Nat Goodwin, when he was a little boy, oh! such a very little boy, just naturally hated girls and absolutely would not play with them at all?

And that Douglas Fairbanks refused to take any exercise, and was always to be found hiding away in some corner with a book?

And that Mrs. Milo, the lady who posed for the statue of Venus de Milo, was the homeliest little girl in town up to the time she was fifteen years of age?

And that Judge Gary, at the age of ten, had no other dream than that of being a labor agitator and strike leader?

And that William J. Bryan was remarkably taciturn, and could hardly ever be induced to express an opinion upon anything?

Well, if you did not know all these things as they have been compiled by Dr. Frank Crane, you have missed a lot of knowledge.

COLORED EXHIBITS AMONG THE BEST

County Demonstration Club Has One of Remarkable Booths of Wayne County Fair

Soford Demonstration Club — mmmzku

In the Exhibition Hall at the Fair are so many articles of interest that it is impossible to describe them all. There is every article of food that can be raised in the state of North Carolina. One exhibit however is of unusual interest. This is the exhibit arranged by the colored women of the county, "The Wayne County Demonstration Club." There are 21 of these clubs in the county, 16 of which are represented in this one booth. They have prepared every known variety of garden and farm product, canned and preserved it ready for winter use. One woman, Mrs. C. V. Brock, of Mt. Olive, has 57 different exhibits in this booth. Mrs. Janie Howell has 58 different exhibits. There are 38 different people who have exhibits, and using the figures as listed above one can readily see how well filled this booth is. Mrs. E. L. McDougal is in charge of the exhibits, as well as the Wayne County Demonstration Club.

London, Nov. 3.—The news of the grave impression created at Washington by Premier Borchers' speeches reached London too late to find official sat the government departments tonight, but it is certain to cause intense disappointment when it becomes generally known.

So many efforts have been made to induce the United States to come to the assistance of distracted Europe that should Washington refuse to be a party to such a strictly circumscribed inquiry, disappointment will be doubled, since it is said that failure of these negotiations will only serve to aggravate the already desperate situation.

FIVE MINUTES OF LIFE

THE TUGGING TURTLE
 By Wickes Wambold

A boy of my acquaintance captured a large turtle. He bored a hole in its shell at the opposite end from its head. He fastened a piece of hay-wire in this hole and tethered the turtle to a stake in the yard.

The turtle immediately got busy. It spent most of its time pulling on that wire trying to get away. Almost any time, day or night, it was tugging away for all it was worth. Around and around that stake it worked its way, pulling at the ground in an attempt to liberate itself.

For six months it kept this up, pawing at the earth with its flippers until it had dug a round that stake which looked like a circus ring. People used to come and look at this turtle and they laughed at its foolish attempts to break a wire strong enough to hold a horse. But—

Unnoticed by all, the constant friction of the persistent pulling slowly wore the wire through the turtle's shell. One morning they found the wire, but no turtle on the end of it. Its persistency had won its freedom.

Now, perhaps, if that turtle had known as much as a man it would have taken stock of the situation and said, "My case is hopeless. I can never break this wire. It is securely twisted in a hole in my shell and I know how tough my shell is. All I can do is to sit and wait until they make me into a stew."

Lots of people are in the position of that turtle. They find themselves in a bad situation through apparently no fault of their own. Then they lie down on the job, and you always find them in a stew. If they cannot see their way out, they make no effort to get out.

It has been my observation that there is a way out of every difficulty. And being able to see one's way out is of the least consequence. It is the keeping everlastingly at that point, it is the never letting go of the big idea, day or night, keeping the goal in sight, and not thinking of the drudgery of the intervening steps. The results that will come to a man who will work in this way are nothing short of miraculous. He will succeed; he cannot be stopped. If he has the persistency of the tugging turtle, you cannot keep him back.

Easy Lessons in AUCTION BRIDGE
New Series
 COPYRIGHT 1923 BY MOYLE, JR.

ARTICLE No. 2

Big hands at Auction play themselves. Even the novice can go game if he holds all the aces and kings. The time when lost tricks become important is in the close hands. Then good judgment and keen perception are required. Tricks lost in such hands rankle. One well-known expert is authority for the statement that four out of every five rubbers are "chucked" that is, lost by bad play or bad bidding. Such a statement by an authority shows the importance of lost tricks and the necessity of studying and, if possible, of eliminating their causes.

It is impossible, of course, to specify one single out the numberless ways of losing tricks. One of the most common is for the weak player to take a finesse which may gain a trick if it wins but is sure to lose game if it fails. Never risk the loss of a game to gain an extra trick.

Another common mistake is the refusal of a player to shift to another suit when he finds his own suit is hopeless. Often the weak player persists in playing his own suit when there is no possible chance to make it. The sensible thing to do under such circumstances is to give up trying for the impossible and shift to another suit that may be your partner's.

Another mistake that the novice frequently makes is failing to unblock his partner's suit, that is, he retains the winning card of the suit until forced to win the trick and then has no more of the suit to lead to his partner. Still another error is the refusal to trump in with the best trump. Many players so dislike to trump in with the top trump that they hold on to their top trump as if it were gold, and let their opponents discard their losing cards on an established suit. Never let an opponent discard if you can avoid doing so. Play the top trump under such conditions just as quickly as the lowest trump.

There are numberless other ways of losing tricks but it is not necessary or expedient to specify them. Whenever you are conscious of having lost a trick or your partner tells you of it, try to get at the cause and endeavor to avoid making that same mistake again. If a player would conscientiously follow this plan, his game would improve so rapidly that he would be surprised. If you do not understand a particular play, do not hesitate to ask a better player. Most players are only too willing to air their knowledge in explaining the cause of your lost tricks. One of the sad sights of any card club is the weak player. The other members avoid him as a pest and his lot is anything but happy. Work to improve your game. There is no royal road to Auction. If you want to become a good player, you must work over your game constantly.

In studying your lost tricks, do not forget that occasionally the same number of tricks can be won by bad play as by good play. Always remember that there is a right way and a wrong way to play Auction and continually strive for the right way. One point that should not be overlooked is that occasionally the loss of a trick is justifiable and represents good play. For example, near the end of a hand you need a certain number of tricks to save game. Then is the time to think what card or cards your partner must have to save game, and to play accordingly. Sometimes you will lose a trick by such tactics but more often you will win. To thus place the cards mentally in the only way to save or win a game and then to play accordingly, is the sign of the expert. A trick lost under such conditions is always a justifiable loss.

Avoid criticizing. Never let the loss of tricks, either your own or your partner's, upset your poise. A cool head is a fine asset in Auction as in everything else. If you let the lost trick of one hand upset your play in the next hand, you are just doubling its importance. Once a trick is lost, forget it. Go on to the next hand without regrets and you will get much better results.

Spades are trumps and Z is in the lead. How can he so play the hand that he will win all the tricks against any defense? This problem is an example of the grand coup, that is, trumping your partner's winning card in order to shorten your trump holding, either to avoid the lead or to obtain a tenace position. In this problem, Z should lead two rounds of diamonds, winning the second round in his own hand with the king. He should then lead the jack of

Don't Lose Sight of the Food Value of Your Bakings

Plain flour has a large amount of food value but it must be combined with good baking powder in order to retain this value.

Most self rising flours are not successful because they do not and cannot raise the bakings to the proper lightness. This means a certain loss of nutrition because they are heavy and hard to digest.

Every time you eat food that does not properly digest you do not get the full nutritional value—you are over-taxing your stomach. Nourishing and perfect bakings are what good health demands. The one sure way is—use pure flour and good baking powder.

If you want to find what thousands of housewives have learned—make some biscuits with self-rising flour—then make some with good plain flour and Calumet Baking Powder—notice the great difference. One trial will satisfy you. Your health demands that you make the experiment.

Those who know—millions of housewives, domestic science teachers, big hotels, restaurants, bakeries and railroads will not use anything but Calumet, the Economy Baking Powder.

Play safe—use Calumet and plain flour. It is the most economical and satisfactory, where light, wholesome and pure foods are desired.

A JOKE ON THE POLICE
 Mrs. Prudentia Ramos, an inmate of a home for the poor in New York, never had a visitor and grew unreasonably melancholy. A few days ago her melancholia disappeared and she became as unreasonably cheerful. It turned out that she was happy with the idea of having found a way to put aside her troubles. She talked gaily for a bit with the superintendent and then took her own three months old infant and went to the roof of the six story building. She balanced one foot carefully on the gipping, stepped the other into space, and in due time stopped on the ground below. They picked the baby up dead, and the police came and charged Mrs. Ramos with homicide. But she must have had something on the police. She died as soon as they got her to the hospital.
