BUDDIES ARE ASSURED OF FINE MEETING

American Legion's October Convention to be Held at Omaha

At the American Legion Convention held at St. Paul, Minn., last October it was decided to hold the next convention at Omaha, Nebraska, October 1925. A committee was at once appointed in Omaha to arrange plans which are now well underway. In order to give the people of the United States and its foreign possessions some idea of the facilities in Omaha for housing, feeding, amusing, entertaining and transporting the 100,000 people, ex-servicemen, legionnaires and American Legion Auxiliaries who will visit the convention, the committee decided upon the plan of appointing speakers representative in all cities of the United States to talk over the radio and broadcast from time to time information regarding the convention and the city of Omaha.

Omaha Big City. Omaha is a big city of more than a quarter of a million—264,382, according to the last government estimate and it has unusual facilities and can take care of 100,000 guests. It has thirty-one hotels, six clubs with dormitories; and there are 50,000 homes in the city.

Omaha is a great deal more accessible for the western states than cities of the east or along the Mississippi. Just as in the olden days the prairie schooners crossed the Missouri river at Omaha, and sent out along the trail across Nebraska which forked off to the Santa Fe trail or the Oregon trail, so the railroad systems of today radiate from Omaha to all points of the west. The city is the fourth railroad center in the United States on the basis of miles of railroad. It also happens that its railroad yards are close to the downtown section so that hundreds of Pullmans can be parked conveniently for visitors to the convention.

Unique Organization

"Ak-Sar-Ben is to the Masons or the Forty-and-Eight as to the Legion." It was formed thirty years ago to promote feeling of goodwill in the city. In the state and throughout the middle west. It is a sort of club with virtually every business and professional man in the city belonging, and operates without profit. Its name is Nebraska reversed.

"Ak-Sar-Ben has a big hall called the Den, in which it puts on a mystic show every Monday night through the summer and excursionists or visitors come from nearby towns to view the spectacle. The Den, by the way, will be the meeting place of the convention of Forty-Eighters, and all the initiating paraphernalia of the "King of Quivers," who is the head of Ak-Sar-Ben.

Accuses Prosecution of Running Away From Facts by Excluding Testimony

BRYAN OBJECT ATTACK

Noted Chicago Lawyer Says State has no Right to Prohibit Views

DAYTON, Tenn., July 11.—Clarence Darrow, counsel for John Scopes, in a statement late today accused the state's legal representatives in the prosecution of the Tennessee evolution case of making an effort to run away from the facts in their fight to prevent the introduction of expert testimony on science in religion.

He charged that this effort is "doubtless an account of their inability to get any scientific man in the world to deny the fact that proved the correctness of evolution."

Attacks Bryan The Chicago lawyer, associated with local attorneys, who are defending the young Dayton biology teacher, directed his attack particularly against William Jennings Bryan, assisting in the state in the prosecution, who holds that evolution and Christianity are irreconcilable.

The valuing counsel for Scopes further declared that the fact that any theory of scientific evolution may be contrary to any religious tenet furnished for a plea to prohibit it.

"If this were true, he said, 'then most of astronomy and geology would fall under the ban.'

Scopes' Statement "Teaching the theory of evolution contrary to the Divine account as recorded in Genesis 1, forbidding that man was evolved from the lower forms of animals, is not a purely question of fact."

"With one or two exceptions every juror in this case has stated he knows little or nothing about evolution. The same thing could be said about any jury assembled in any state in the Union. As there are some thousands of different religions and some five hundred sets of Christians, naturally there is some difference of opinion as to the Divine account as taught in the Bible."

"More than one account is given of the creation of man in the Bible, and these do not agree. Men have debated a long time as to the meaning of the MUCH in the Bible, and especially of the account of creation, and yet Tennessee jury that has given no attention to evolution is supposed to know, first, what evolution is, and, secondly, what the Bible teaches and the account in the Bible are in conflict."

"And Mr. Bryan says they should evade this without this evidence. It is obvious that no jury can accomplish any such thing."

"The effort to keep the defendant from offering evidence in this case is a plain effort to run away from the facts and is doubtless an account of their inability to get any scientific man in the world to deny the facts that prove the correctness of evolution."

"This is further shown by the fact that Mr. Bryan delivered a public talk here and said the facts of religion and evolution will at last be brought to light. This Tennessee jury is expected by the state without evidence to find man can be a Christian and an evolutionist and this despite the fact that millions of the ablest men in the world, including a large proportion of students of religion, are both Christians and evolutionists. Among these are the ablest scientists of the world."
