

LADY GODIVA OF TODAY IS SHOWN

But Modern Miss Godiva Didn't Get Complete Show As It Was Planned

CHICAGO, Nov. 26.—Two Godivas, one real, the other wax, brought the annual arts ball to an anti-climactic close at half past one this morning.

Three thousand revellers who had come to see how life is to be lived in 2,000 A. D. and who had been told in publicity prose for a fortnight that Lady Godiva would be recreated in her original artistic undrape, met disappointment.

An hour before the Godiva business, which was down on the program as "Fashion of 200 A. D.", the committee, which had been visible during the past week discouraging the artistic daring of the Coventry enterprise, insisted that Miss Rosalind Hightower, Detroit artist, positively would appear unclothed, just like Lady Godiva long before Bevers did.

Only Wax Figure
But when the curtains were parted the guests, massed in front of the brightly lighted stage, saw only a figure in wax. It was Miss Hightower's figure, made by a Chicago artist, but with all its symmetry of line, it was wax none the less.

The curtains came together for a few seconds. When they were parted, the wax figure had disappeared. In its place stood Miss Hightower, clad in a gossamer material and posed so nearly like the paraffin statue that many did not know the difference.

If the stage hand which manipulated the curtains had been rehearsed better, the Godiva finale might have been more successful. Miss Hightower was to have stepped from her gilt frame and advanced to the front of the stage to give the legend-minded audience an opportunity of seeing what Lady Godiva looked like.

But the stage hand got his cues mixed, and dropped the curtains before she could take a step.

Miss Hightower, the committee and the publicity directors were loath to comment on the affair. There had been a mistake, they said but they did not say whose. Some of the guests were inclined to believe they had made a mistake in believing that the Godiva legend would be recreated unexpurgated.

During the original Lady Godiva ride through the streets of Coventry about 1,000 A. D. the populace was supposed to keep its door and windows closed, so that none might spy upon the lady in her unconventional equestrian excursion. One man, however, a tailor named Tom, took a peep, and went blind, thus giving the English vocabulary the expression "Peeping Tom." Not an eye was lost at the arts ball.

LACK OF FACTS IS CHARGE MADE

Chairman Green Has Something To Say of U. S. Chamber of Commerce

WASHINGTON, Nov. 26.—(AP)—The Chamber of Commerce of the United States was accused by Chairman Green of the House ways and means committee of acting "without information on the subject," in demanding the tax reduction of $400,000,000. His stand was similar to that taken by President Coolidge who considers the attitude of the Chamber concerning decreased taxes and increased expenditures absurd.

Green said that in his judgment the amount of tax reduction recommended by the committee $245,820,000 according to its own estimate is now "too large to leave a proper working balance in the treasury for the fiscal year of 1929." This figure exceeded by more than $10,000,000 the maximum of $355,820,000 set by the committee.

Negro Suffers Broken Neck in Fall But May Live To Relate Story

Dr. Will Spicer Performs Successful Laminectomy Operation on Gus Smith

REMOVES BROKEN BONE AT BASE OF NECK

Patient Regaining Use of His Limbs After Passage of Week in Hospital

Gus Smith, negro, fell and broke his neck while engaged in his usual work at the Empire Manufacturing company, but all the evidence now indicates that he will live to tell the story to his grand children. A week ago Dr. Will Spicer performed a laminectomy operation as a last resort at having Smith's life.

The passage of the week and the general response of Smith to the operation shows it a successful one. Yesterday he was able to begin to move his legs again, use of which had been cut off by the break in his neck.

Smith's firemen had sent him out to attend to his usual duty in connection with keeping the steam pressure up at the Empire. About thirty minutes later he was found, unconscious, at the foot of a sawdust pile about which he had been working. A vertebrae in the lower part of his neck was broken, an X-Ray performed by Dr. Spicer at his sanatorium revealed, it was either do a laminectomy or allow the man to die without any effort on his behalf.

In the presence of several physicians and others, Dr. Spicer operated. He removed the broken vertebrae in such fashion as to relieve the pressure on the spinal cord, taking care to leave the bone covering. The latter is a very important part of the operation, it was learned as no bone will grow from the covering, without sufficient youth remains.

Officials of the Empire company ordered that every effort and comfort which the sanatorium provides be given Smith, who is point of service has been longer in the employ of the Empire company than any other man. Fifty-two years old, he has been with the company since it was started and even before the plant went under the O'Berry name.

He had been subject to vertigo and it is believed that he was taken with an attack while on top of the sawdust pile. In falling his head struck a cement coping, causing the broken neck joint.

Laminectomy operations such as that performed by Dr. Spicer to save the man's life are comparatively rare in surgical cases.

REMUS CASE NEAR TO END

Defense Seeks to Satisfy Jury That Remus Was Insane When He Shot

CINCINNATI, Nov. 26.—(AP)—Insanity today became the theme of George Remus, murder trial when the state rested its case and the defense plunged into the attempt to establish in the minds of the two women and ten men of the jury that the defendant was temporarily unbalanced mentally when he ran down and shot to death his wife in a park here seven weeks ago.

For a solid week the prosecution emphasized the theme of cold blooded murder, a slaying as the result of a four cornered plot in which Remus acted his part of executioner. The defense had only an hour and a half left of the court session when it got its chance to strike the first blow in behalf of Remus. It immediately whirled into its major theme. It called two men who had been in intimate contact with Remus in recent months. Both witnesses, with no knowledge of the medical description of insanity, they asserted the bold belief that Remus was insane.

Remus' ravings attempt to indicate the government agents had entered into conspiracy with a gang in St. Louis, Mo., to terminate him was another thing one of the witnesses said that influenced him to the opinion Remus was insane.

DISCONTENT IS GREAT PROBLEM

Dean Taylor of State College Gives Ideas on Farm Situation

RALEIGH, Nov. 26.—(AP)—Social discontent is the chief key to the present agricultural situation, C. C. Taylor, Dean of the Graduate school and director of the bureau of economic and social research at N. C. State, believes.

"There is taking place, in almost all agricultural sections of the country, a recession in the high standard of living attained by agricultural people during the period of high prices," he says.

"There is an uneasiness in the rural population indexed by the drastic shift from farming to other occupations and from rural to urban centers."

"There is taking place, a realignment of economic processes and social groupings more marked than at any other period of our natural existence, with the exception of the era of our westward expansion."

"The think of farm people is more disturbed, more in a state of quandry more on a state of belligerency, than it has ever been, with the exception of the periods of the early seventies and late eighties of the last century."

Dr. Taylor suggested that rural sociologists attack these elements in the situation; the rural standard of living; the shift in rural population; the readjustment or realignment or rural groupings; and the thinking and desiring of rural people.

Of the rural standard of living, Dr. Taylor said it is the measure of the relative success or failure of agriculture.

"It is an index to the economic and social life of farm families and rural communities. A knowledge of what standards of living actually obtain in the various agricultural regions of the nation; a knowledge of what economic, institutional, and community factors influence these standards; and the relations that the different elements in a family's standard of living have to each other are immensely important."

As to rural population studies, Dr. Taylor says the drift to the city is decreed by some and hailed by others as the blow but final solution to the misadjustment in agricultural production.

"Which is right? Who knows? No one surely until we know who it is (Continued on Page Three)
