CONVENTION SAT UNTIL LATE INTO LAST NIGHT

George of Georgia, Woolen of Indiana, and Ayers of Kansas Also Offered

SAM HOUSTON HALL, Texas June 27.—(AP)—Texas Militant Democrats in National Convention sat late into the night listening to the praises of her favorite sons and staging more which the present gathering is bedeviled of the spirited demonstrations for which the present gathering is becoming noted.

Governor Smith of New York was placed in nomination to the roaring enthusiasm of his supporters who want him rushed through to a quick culmination.

Senator George of Georgia and Representative Ayres of Kansas and Evans Woolen also received their share of praise from those who sponsored them as candidates for president.

A great Smith demonstration was set off by Franklin D. Roosevelt, who placed Governor Smith in nomination as the "Happy Warrior" upon whose shoulders victory always perched. During the noisy tribute to the New York governor two or three fist fights enlivened the parading, all of them resulting from disputes whether Southern states standards should join the Smith procession about the hall place around the Mississippi stand.

Most of the floor fighting took place around the Mississippi standard near the Alabama and North Carolina sections where outbreaks occurred in the afternoon.

When the convention adjourned at 11:15 to meet again at 10:30 o'clock tomorrow morning, Senator Reed of Missouri Gilbert M. Hitchcock of Nebraska, and Allee Pomerene of Ohio all duly registered candidates remained to be placed in nomination.

At the instance of Charles A. Greathouse, of Indiana, the convention adopted a resolution of appreciation for the services to the party of the late vice president Thomas R. Marshall. The convention stood in silence while a band played "Nearer My God to Thee."

When the convention had paid its tribute to Mr. Marshall, Josephus Daniels, took the stand to offer a resolution in eulogy of William Jennings Bryan. He asked that the convention pause to honor the commoner who had spent so many years of his life in the service of his party.

To do honor to the memory of Mr. Bryan the convention arose and stood in silence. "Rock of Ages" was played softly by the band in the south end of the hall. On the roll call of the states, Alabama yielded to Georgia and Charles R. Crisp, of Georgia took the stand and presented the name of Senator Walter F. George.

Mr. Crisp pleaded for the support of other Southern states for Senator George, reminding Alabama that when she had a favorite son, Georgia had stood by him. He referred to the candidacy of Oscar W. Underwood four years ago.

Mr. Crisp spoke for more than 30 minutes for his fellow Georgian and a parade with many Southern banners went around and around the hall for him following.

The next state on roll call and Harry D. Sane, chairman of the delegation announced "Arizona yields to New York's illustrious son the next president of the United States."

BITTER SCENES MARK HEARING

Two Senators Nearly Come To Blow and Coley Blease Plays Peacemaker

HOUSTON, Texas, June 27.—(AP)—Some of the intense bitterness over the prohibition issue which underlies the Democratic National Convention came to the surface today at public hearings today before the platform committee with resultant scenes of disorder and a threat of a personal collision between two United States Senators.

For more than two hours advocates and opponents of the 18th amendment and the Volstead act battled back and forth in the stately auditorium of Houston's beautiful public library. The climax came just at the end while Bishop James Cannon, Jr., of the Methodist Episcopal church, S. held the floor arguing for a law enforcement plank in behalf of the 31 temperance organizations of the country. He made statements regarding the state of Maryland whose Senator Millard Tydings of that commonwealth repeatedly branded as "false."

This finally aroused Senator Carter Glass of Virginia, the home state of Bishop Cannon, the Senator advanced from his place on one side of the hall waving his hand and protesting against such characterization.

Senator Tydings leaped to his feet and started forward while the crowd of men and women that packed the room strained forward in expectancy. The Marylander advanced only a few feet, however, before Senator Coley Blease, of South Carolina himself a fighter grabbed him by the shoulders and half forced him by persuasion back to his seat.

Before that Tydings, and Josephus Daniels, of North Carolina editor had clashed over the position of Woodrow Wilson on prohibition. In urging his plank calling for determination of the liquor question by the individual state the Marylander reminded his hearers that the war president had vetoed the Volstead act. "Don't praise the great president in one paragraph of your platform and repudiate him in another," Tydings said.

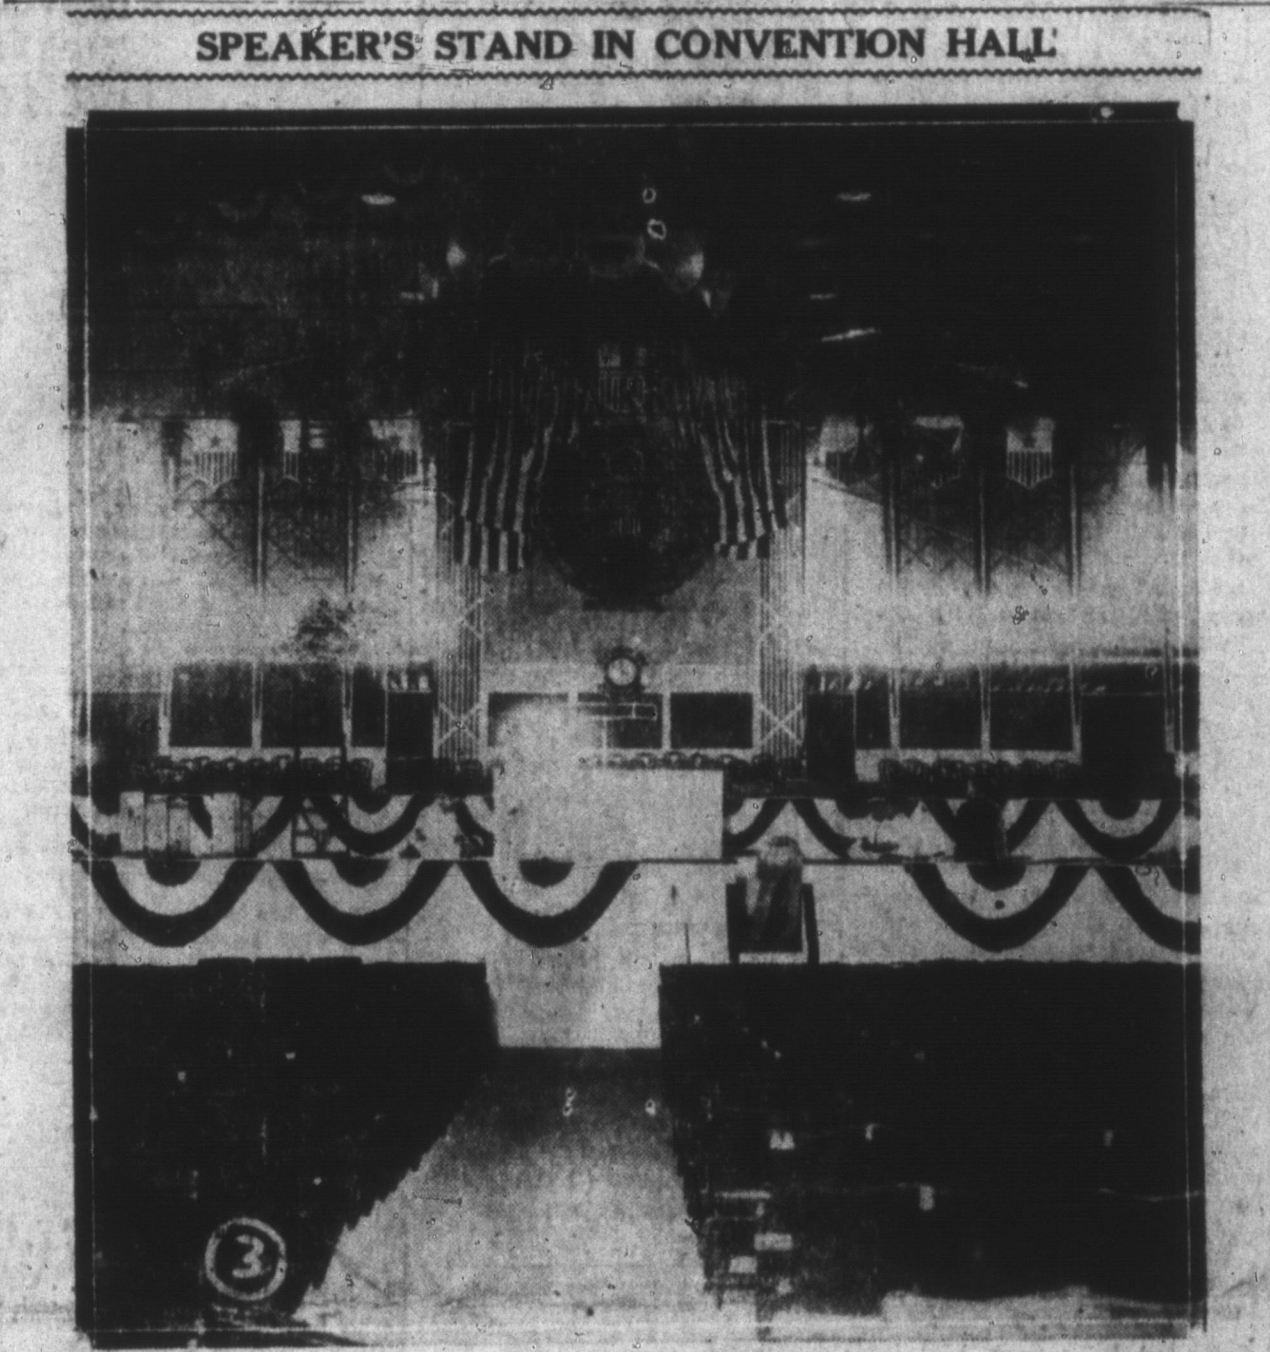

Taking the floor a moment later, Daniels who says under Wilson for 8 years, made a fiery speech in which he protested against "such unallowable use of Woodrow Wilson's name." He asserted that Wilson vetoed the Volstead act because it continued two war measures that he had asked Congress to repeal.

Within a few months before his death," Daniels added. "He wrote a letter to a distinguished man saying that neither the 18th amendment nor the Volstead act should be changed. I love him too much to see his name invoked to bring back the greatest curse that this country has ever had."

Tydings held a hasty conference with J. P. Tumulty, who was Wilson's private secretary and who was a spectator at the hearings. The Marylander then stated that whatever Wilson might have said or written privately the fact remained that he had vetoed the dry law.

"When the prohibition hearings were closed, the committee gave three hours to those asking for a strong plank on farm relief before yielding which late in the night locked itself up with the job of framing a platform. On this sub-committee is one representative of the organized farmers.

Expectations tonight were that the sub-committee would be ready to report back to the full body tomorrow. The platform then will be discussed all over again.
