Port Author still stands. The son stubbornly refuses to be tarved out or smoked out.

To familiarise the farmers in vance with the boll-weevil the ate Agricultural Department. medicality Grant lin Sherman the Entomologist, is offering to end some dead weevils to those who are willing to pay for postage and packing. As the say-ing goes about Indians so also with boll-weevils, there are no od ones but dead ones. Some e, as for our part, we can't ske off a sort of contented gness to let Mr. Sherman keep them, even if they are dead.

The South may not need any ecial kindnesses at President sevelt's hands. At the same time it needn't trouble itself to to throw obstacles in the way of any kind intentions he may ve. It was a very great son of the South, a man of surpass ing ability of heart and mind. she felt that as a rule of action in life it was better to conciliate than to crush. If the South and Mr. Roosevelt should take the same view of this rule of action at the same time no great harm could come from either to the other.

The address of President Harvie Jordan of the Southern Cotton Growers Association makes interesting reading. He calls upon the cotton planters of the th to stand together and hold up" the world on cotton. The South has the cotton and is in better shape than ever before to hold it in fact, is well able to hold it for a better price. The farmers are in good condition cially and with abundant crops are strong on supplies. A united effort such as they are able to make if they want to would be felt the world over. There are few indeed who are not able to hold their cotton. For every farmer not able to hold his cotton there are two or three able to buy it and hold it themselves. We were talking with a farmer yesterday who had bought the cotton his neighbors re unable to hold last year and carried it until he sold with a profit of over $500.

THE LABOR VOTE.

Detroit Pres Press

outcome of the Presidential conorganized labor was of any consequence whatever as a source of votes. It is a general and possibly well-founded assumption that unionists are hostile to the trusts and for the party ingly forth as an enemy of the ndustrial organizations, labor element-aud in the definition of this term we include the sympathizers of unionists as well as the unionists them-selves—would hold a balance of power which would permit them to exercise a vast it not a decisive influence. But it is apparent that the unionists, voted for Roosevelt.

It is true, however, that in two States the hostility of organized labor was effective to defeat candidates for governor. It was the union vote that elected Douglas in Massachusetts and ft was the union vote that deicated Pcabody in Colorado. Organized labor is not only strong in Massachusetts, but it is evidently appreciative. W. L. Douglas in the former State made a vigorous campaign in which his own relation to organized labor was not a more potent influence than his method of expressing his views on re-ciprocity and excessive tariff rates. He argued that recipro-city, and particularly reciprocity with Canada, would so decrease the cost of raw materials that manufacturers could afford to pay their workmen more and he based his argument for general-ly lower tariff rates on the same conclusion. Coupled with his personal popularity and possibly sided somewhat by the unpopularity of his opponent, he was successful in carrying by 25,000 votes a State that gave Roosevelt a plurality of 80,000. The causes of Peabody's de-feat in Colorado can be traced feat in Colorado can be traced only in part to the loss of the labor vote. His high-handed methods, his utter disregard for individual rights, and his assumption of authority apparently turned many voters against him. But unionism was at the bottom of his defeat, and in that case unionism stood for law and order and regard for the fundamental law of the State and of the land.
