AMERICA'S TIMBER SUPPLY.

It Must Soon Give Out—Increase in Lumber Consumption is Twice as Rapid as Increase in Population and We are Using Three Times as Much Timber Each Year as the Forest Grows.

Every person in the United States is using over six times as much wood as he would use if he were in Europe. The country as a whole consumes every year between three and four times more wood than all of the forests of the United States grow in the meantime. The average acre of forest lays up a store of only ten cubic feet annually, whereas it ought to be laying up at least thirty cubic feet in order to furnish the products taken out of it. Since 1880 more than 700,000,000 feet of timber have been cut for lumber alone, including 80,000,000 feet of coniferous timber in excess of the total coniferous stumpage estimate of the census in 1880.

These are some of the remarkable statements made in Circular 97 of the Forest Service, which deals with the timber supply of the United States and reviews the stumpage estimates made by all the important authorities. A study of the circular must lead directly to the conclusion that the rate at which forest products in the United States have been and are being consumed is far too lavish, and that only one result can follow unless steps are promptly taken to prevent waste in use and to increase the growth rate of every acre of forest in the United States. This result is a timber famine. This country is to-day in the same position with regard to forest resources as was Germany 150 years ago. During this period of 150 years such German States as Saxony and Prussia, particularly the latter, have applied a policy of government control and regulation which has immensely increased the productivity of their forests. The same policy will achieve even better results in the United States, because we have the advantage of all the lessons which Europe has learned and paid for in the course of a century of theory and practice.

Let it might be assumed that the rapid and gaining depletion of American forest resources is sufficiently accounted for by the increase of population, it is pointed out in the circular that the increase in population since 1880 is barely more than half the increase in lumber cut in the same period. Two areas supplying timber have already reached and passed their maximum production—the North-eastern States in 1870 and the Lake States in 1890. To-day the Southern States, which cut yellow pine amounting to one-third the total annual lumber cut of the country, are undoubtedly near their maximum. The Pacific States will soon take the ascendancy. The State of Washington within a few years has come to the front and now ranks first of all individual States in volume of cut.

At present but one-fifth of the total forest area of the United States is embraced in National Forests. The remaining four-fifths have already passed or are most likely to pass into private lands. The average age of the trees felled for lumber this year is not less than 150 years. In other words, if he is to secure a second crop of trees of the same size, the lumberman or private forest owner must wait, say, at least one hundred years for the second crop to grow. As a rule such long-time investments as this waiting would involve do commend themselves to business men who are accustomed to quick returns. But the States and the Nation can look much farther ahead. The larger, then, the area of National and State control over woodlands, the greater is the likelihood that the forest of the country will be kept permanently productive.

The Man Who Wins.

The man who wins is the man who works—The man who toils while the next man shirks; The man who stands in his deep distress—With his head held high in the deadly press—Yes, he is the man who wins. The man who wins is the man who knows The value of pain and the worth of woes—Who in his lesson learns from the man who fails—And a moral finds in his mournful wails—Yes, he is the man who wins. The man who wins is the man who stays In the unsought paths and the rocky ways, And, perhaps, who lingers, now and then To help some failure to rise again, Yes, he is the man who wins. And the man who wins is the man who hears The curse of the envious in his ears, But who goes his way with his head held high And passes the wrecks of the failures by—For he is the man who wins.

The Georgia Pine Distilling Company's plant at Fayetteville was destroyed by fire Wednesday night. The loss is estimated at $75,000.

TELLS HER PITIFUL STORY.

Miss Loving Tells Story On Witness Stand of How Young Estes Strayed Her—Father's Fate Depends on Substantiation of This Story—A Dramatic Scene in Virginia Court.

Judge William G. Loving is on trial at Houston, Va., for the murder of young Theodore Estes who, it is alleged, ruined his 19-year-old daughter, Miss Elizabeth Loving. Tuesday Miss Loving went on the stand as a witness in behalf of her father and told the story of her downfall at the hands of Estes. The scene in the court room is described as being intensely dramatic. The Associated Press dispatch says: Between stifling sobs, with tears streaming from her bright blue eyes, and vainly struggling to control her emotions, Miss Elizabeth Loving, has occupied the centre of the stage in the trial of her father, Judge William G. Loving, for the murder of Theodore Estes, told on the witness stand here to-day of the story of her alleged ruin at the hands of the young man her parent shot down. The recital was probably the most dramatic ever heard in a Virginia court of justice and rivalled if not surpassed in point of atrociousness the story told by Evelyn Nesbit and Stanford White. It was the same story she said she told her father on the day of the tragedy.

"The dead man she declared gave her a drink of whiskey from a flask he had in his pocket while they were buggy riding the day prior to the killing. After taking the drink, she said she immediately began to feel dizzy and her brain whirled as if she had been given some powerful drug. In this condition, and despite her protests, she declared that her escort drove her through a road not frequently used and despite her screams outraged her. Exhausted by the struggle and her mental faculties upset by the stimulant, the witness declared that she recalled nothing more until she regained her senses, in bed late that night at the home of County Clerk E. L. Kidd, where she had been visiting. On the following morning when her father asked her to explain how she came to be brought to the home of Mr. Kidd in an unconscious and drugged condition, she related to him on bended knees the same story she told to-day. It was this recital, declared the defense, which so wrought up Judge Loving that he was impelled to hunt up young Estes and take his life."

THE EDITORS' MEETING.

President Sends Out Programme of Speakers at Morehead City Next July.

The annual meeting of the North Carolina Press Association will be held this year in Morehead City, on July 17 and 18. $100 REWARD.

To whom it may concern:—Some dirty scoundrel has started a lie about me and my business. "They say"—and there is no more contemptible liar than "they say"—we have been adulterating our flour with rock, or chalk, or something of the kind, all of which is a malicious lie without any foundation whatever. I will pay $100 for evidence to convict any one of making a charge of this kind or circulating this lie in a way calculated to impress others that it is the truth.
