UNIVERSITY DAY OBSERVED.

North Carolina Featured by Re-ira of Copper Plate Corner Stone -A. B. Andrews, of Raleigh Was laster of Ceremonics.

Correspondence of The Gazette.

CHAPEL HILL, Oct. 16.—The return Thursday to the University of North Carolina of a copper plate which was on the cornerstone of the Oid East Building when it was laid on October 12, 1793, featured the celebration of University Day here. The presentation was made by A. B. Andrews, of Raisigh, grand master of the Masonic order of this State.

The plate was believed to have been removed from the University during reconstruction days, immediately following the civil war, was discovered several weeks ago in a discovered several weeks ago in a pile of junk in the foundry at Clarksville, Tenn. by T. B. Foust, owner of the foundry, and a member of the class of 1903 of the University. Mr. Foust contemplated returning the plate directly to President Graham, but later decided to return it through Mr. Andrews as more appropriate to the occasion.

The inscription on the plate states that William Richardson Davie grand master of the Masonic order in North Carolina and trustee and commissioner of the University, as-sisted by the other commissioners, "on the 12th day of October, in the year of Masonry, 1793, and the 18th ear of American Independence, laid the cornerstone of this edifice. erent times was United States Commissioner to France, a United States senator, and Governor of North Carolina.

Lee's Flag and Papers.

Richmond News-Leader. The patriotic act of John F. Mayer n placing General Lee's headquarters flag in its natural resting place, the Confederate museum, suggest that other relies of the great commander must still be in the country elsewhere than in the hands of the Lee family and of the museum au-times. General Lee was likewise one of the most careful of his official records. In addition to preserving the correspondence of his headquarters, he regularly wrote the reports of his campaigns and forwarded them to the war department. These reports were something more than separate narratives of unconnected battles. They were designed and written to form a complete story and were so arranged that by the simple deletion of the opening paragraphs of all the reports forwarded after the Seven Days' Fight, they could be shaped into a history of the Army of Northern Virginia from Mechanicsville to Spotsylvania Courthouse. It was General Lee's desire that this should be done, in order that the achievements of his army might be recorded for posterity. Several times he wrote the war department regarding the publication of all his reports in one volume, but never, so far as we know, with success. It would be splendid public service even now it one of our patriotic societies would carry out the wishes of our Southern hero and would publish, precisely as e wished them, the reports of the

Backache Is Discouraging

But Not So Bad If You Know How to Reach the Cause.

Nothing more discouraging than a constant backache. Lame when you awaken, pains pierce you when you bend or lift. It's hard to work or to rest. Backache often indicates bad kidneys. Gastonia people recom-mend Doan's Kidney Pills. Read this case:

Mrs. R. F. Gardner, 117 S. Highland St., Gastonia, says: "I suffered a great deal from a weak and lame back and I could hardly get around. was on my feet a great deal and backache and sharp twinges darted through my kidneys. I was often so bad I couldn't move. Doan's Kidney Pills were recommended to me by one of the family and I got a box. A few doses made my back feel better and after taking one box. I didn't have any trouble from my back or rania campaign, General Lee's time was so completely occupied that he apparently did not write an extended apparently did not write an extended report of that or any of his subsequent campaigns. At least the eductors of the Official Records were never able to locate such reports, if they were prepared. Our only knowledge of Lee's views of operations during the last 11 months is derived from brief daily dispatches and from occasional reports, such as his letters to Mr. Davis after the surrender. Mr. Davis after the surrender.

We are not inclined, however, altogether to despair of filling in these gaps. As Mr. Mayer pointed out in his letter to Miss Harrison regarding the headquarters flag, many of Gen-eral Lee's papers had been sent to Richmond before the evacuation and were carried South with the other archives. Most of them, we know, were recovered by the Federals and were taken to Washington where they now repose in the war depart-ment. But were these all? If Mr Mayer were able to save the flag, might not others have been able to save some of his unpublished manuscripts?

Then there were the papers which Colonels Marshall and Taylor carried with them on the retreat from Petersburg to Appointation. What has become of all these? We have evidence that the Confederate headquarters' baggage had to be abandon-doned during the retreat and from this we may well reason that it fell into the hands of the Federals. If this be the case, those familiar with the habits of soldiers may well doubt whether all that was seized ever reached the Federal war department It is altogether possible that some where in the North may be Lee pa pers of the utmost importance.

The same is perhaps true of some of General Lee's personal relics. When he was forced to abandon his headquarters's wagon, Lee and the members of his staff took their best uniforms and left the others. This was explained during the interview at McLean's house and accounts, in some measure, for the superior appearance of the Confederate officer on that memorable occasion. But what became of the uniforms and accoutrements left behind on road? Were they preserved? We have never heard.

The liberality of the Lee family and the love of his soldiers have vested in the Southern people most of the relics of this incomparable man. Only his sword remains—and rightfully remains — in the possession of his family. Virtually all the rest, except his intimate domestic letters, is where it may be seen by the world. But everything connected with him, it matters not how trivially, has a well nigh sacred interest. Every autograph, every relic, every paper, every anecdote should be cherished. For when another 50 years shall have drowned the last passion that survived the war. Lee will stand—we say it unhesitatingly -where only Washington will reach even to his shoulder in the hall of American fame.

PROMINENT FARMER SAYS TANLA HELPED HER ESCAPE AN OPERATI

"Taniac has made such a wonderful change in my wife's condition that I sent for the neighbors so they could see for themselves what great medicine Tanlac is," exclaimed W. N. Care, prominent farmer of R. F. D. 2, Wilmington, to the Tanisc Man.

"Mrs. Care was told by several doctors that an operation would be her only hope. Her case had been diagnosed as ulcers of the stomach. Bor two months before starting on Tanlac, doctors had her dieting on light soups and the like. They wanted her to undergo an operation, but Mrs. Care feared for this.

'She isn't going to a hospital now for her sleep is fine; she can out any food she wants without it hurting her and she has dismissed the cook, because Mrs. Care is again able to tend to her own cooking."
