GASTONIA PEOPLE WARNED AGAINST SECRET MEDICINES---"STICK TO NATURE"

When contagious disease once gets foothold in any community it is an exceedingly difficult matter to check it, and the most drastic measures must be enforced to stamp it out. When such an outbreak appears the efforts of health authorities are properly devoted to preventing its further spread; like a fire deparlment when they see a structure, is foomed they turn their attention to say ing the surrounding buildings.

The people themselves should adopt a reven ive by keeping their bodies strong and healthy and in constition to ward off any disease that might make its appearance. the preliminary stors to a permanent and lasting peace. Gradual disarmament on both land and seas would automatically follow the formation of such a league. The President is perfectly willing for naval strength to be apportioned from a geographical standpoint, but insists that such apportionment preclude the possibility that any group of nations shall continue to be stronger than the league itself. He appreciates the British viewpoint in a most conciliatory manner, frankly explaining that American public opinion is plainly insistent that should a naval agreement not be made, there is nothing remaining for the United States to do but to build the greatest navy of the world, for which yards, constructors and money are now available. He opposes stripping the Central powers for a huge indemnity which might compel them to repudiate a part of their debts.
